In his Labor Government he has some remarkable lieutenants, most of them men of humble origin whose success is due to their own strength of character without any privilege of birth or accident. Philip Snowden, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, a cripple, physically but not spiritually handicapped by this infirmity, is a man of rare force which burns in him like a flame. He is dangerous because he has a dogged, unwavering faith in certain principles and abstract ideas and will not budge from them though he stands alone or conditions alter around him. Such is his faith in free trade, once the cause, perhaps, of Britain's commercial greatness—when British industry had the lead—now not utterly convincing in many minds when British industries have to face sharp competition from foreign countries invading England with cheap goods. His stubborn unyielding spirit was fully shown at The Hague last year when he tired out French and Belgian and Italian delegates to the reparations conference when they claimed a greater share of payment than Philip Snowden thought fair to the interests of Britain or loyal to previous agreements.

THE French were deeply annoyed by his refusal to budge a hair's breadth week after week. "Now," said one of them gazing at the thin lips tightly drawn, the pallid skin, the deep-set eyes, the resolute chin of the English Chancellor, "Now I understand what manner of Englishman it was who burnt Joan of Arc." That was a bitter comment and the easy answer would have been, "Such an Englishman would not have abandoned Joan of Arc as Frenchmen did."

That also would have been bitter, and such sayings do not help. Mr. Snowden is a Yorkshireman, and that accounts for a lot to those who know Yorkshire and the dogged character of its people. In the House of Commons he is cold and ruthless in debate, and Winston Churchill reddens sometimes under the lash of that tongue. But privately Philip Snowden is kind and gentle, with a soft, pleasing voice and a smile that lights up his thoughtful, introspective eyes. Like his Prime Minister, he stands for Britain rather than for a class. He has a hatred of bolshevism and of all tyrannies whether from Left or Right. He is regarded by treasury officials as one of the few recent Chancellors who understands finance and has sound views on debt redemption.

Unfortunately for the well-to-do and for people who are earning big incomes by hard work and ability or some touch of genius, and especially to the misfortune of those who have inherited wealth, he is ruthless—no doubt he has to be ruthless—in his taxation. It is here that the real revolution in Britain is being effected. A man who earns £10,000 a year has to pay half to the tax collectors. Death duties are annihilating the great estates and wiping out the landed gentry. Gradually but very surely Britain is being changed into a middle-class, bourgeois nation like Belgium or Holland. The Labor Government may be speeding up this process deliberately, but it had already gone a long way under the Conservatives and Liberals and is perhaps inevitable, inevitable so long as Great Britain has to pay off the enormous burden of national debt caused by the war.

Among other Ministers of the Labor Government who have the limelight on them is J. H. Thomas, Lord Privy Seal, the joy of the caricaturists because of his alleged affection for evening clothes, and his cockney type of face. Mr. Thomas staked a considerable part of his reputation upon the task of lowering unemployment, and although he has failed utterly to reduce the figures, which have steadily increased since Labor took office, his popularity does not seem to have been seriously affected, be-otherwise, to be good. A plan to get the child on a business basis was recently described by E. A. Hungerford in The Thrift Magazine. In this case the parents drew up a chart for each day of the week. The perfect accomplishment for a single day represented the scoring of 100 points, under ten different headings. Each child—there were two in this family—was paid by the week an allowance in proportion to his or her achievement for each day of this period. Five cents was given for each 100 points scored. For each month of accomplishment of 80 per cent or better a bonus of 1 per cent was given. Each child was asked to record in an account book all items of income and outgo.

THE PERFECT CHILD FOR A SPANKLESS AGE

The ten items on which the scoring was based were: Room and things in order, 5 points each for forenoon and afternoon; toilet, including bath and neatness of dress, 4 points each for forenoon and afternoon; on time for meals and good table manners, 4 points for each meal; reading at least one chapter of the Bible, 12 points; clean teeth twice daily, 5 points for each time; regular bed hours and prayers, 5 points each for forenoon and afternoon; control of temper, 10 points; help about home, 10 points; outdoor exercises, 8 points; school record—lessons prepared on time, home on time—10 points.

On the chart there was a column in which to record daily total points received and another for daily amount of money due. The plan was kept up for two years—the children in the case were 8 or 9 years old—and by this time the habits were more or less ingrained. In later years the child received a straight allowance, but kept a budget through school and college.

THE newer education takes more of a laissez-faire attitude toward discipline and the molding of the perfect child. It believes that baby learns best to keep his fingers away from the stove by having them toasted a few times. It follows rather the Herbert Spencer theory that punishment should be inherent in the thing itself—that punishment should vary according to the misdeed, the misdoer and the attending circumstances. No longer is there any one punishment, such as spanking, to fit all cases. Discipline, say the modernists, should mean a study of the causes and difficulties, and training and guidance in the right direction, with punishment as an occasional factor.

"All children are born into the world uncivilized, non-moral individuals, dominated entirely by selfish motives and with the sum total of their physical and mental activities directed toward seeking pleasure and avoiding pain," says a bulletin from the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor. Training this young animal even to exist in the restricted society of today, when practically every action he takes has its effect upon others, is indeed a science in itself. And perfection of action and attitude in a city filled with people, apartments and taxicabs is an ideal which seems almost beyond attainment.

Among primitive peoples the requirements for entrance into the select circle of perfection do not seem to be so exacting. Recently, for example, a report came regarding the habits of a tribe on the Admiralty Islands. The children of the tribe begin, at the age of 3, to smoke cigarettes of Louisiana twist wrapped in newspapers. Rolling their own at 3, swimming half a mile at 5, chewing large amounts of betel nut when older—these activities are more important than saying "please" to teacher. And in olden times a stoical endurance of pain was more a virtue than to refrain from knocking over sister's pile of blocks.

In cultures simpler than our own, sociologists tell us, physical punishment is very rare. The rod is not employed because the child comprehends early the value of obedience. Acceptance of authority hardly needs to be taught, and corporal punishment, when administered, is taken very lightly, as children are already hardened by the blows and buffets of the life in the open, and a few more would make only little impression upon them. Besides, the primitive man sets great store by an unbroken free spirit of the child as a necessary quality for this type of life, and blows are generally frowned on. The American Indian, for instance, rejoiced—when the plains were his—over the wild, unrestrained conduct of his children; and it was the intention of his training to induce a fearless spirit. He may not have heard the saying "One might as well break a child's back as his spirit," or "Spare the rod and spoil the child," but a spirited child, even if "spoiled," was his pride.

So the modern attitude may be the result of the acquiring of greater knowledge of a child's mental and spiritual make-up, of the analysis of the underlying causes of "badness," of the study of a child's nature and needs which began only within the last few decades. It may be a swing back of the cycle to primitive wisdom or the suspicion that the child brings himself up in spite of his parents rather than because of them or according to their dictates and any adult-made set of rules.

Moscow.

MOSCOW is enduring a new invasion. The city of Ivan the Terrible and of Boris Godunov is being besieged by a new army. The siege is not apparent to the casual observer. The Kremlin walls with their nineteen towers look as impregnable as ever and the great-coated, heavily armed soldiers at the gates seem as immovable as they must have seemed five centuries ago. The beautiful gilded domes of Moscow's many churches show no marks of foreign explosives; and if the streets are piled high with broken stone, they suggest the perennial activity of New York street repairers, not the venom of a hostile army.

It is in the hotel dining rooms that one must look if one wishes to see the invaders. They dine there every evening and in steadily increasing numbers. In the rococo atmosphere of paneled ceilings, towering palms and orange lights, to the crashing accompaniment of a well-trained if too strident orchestra, they lay their plans and discuss their campaigns. As one passes between the tables looking for an empty corner, one hears snatches of conversation in familiar tones. "Yes, sir, I told them we could do it and be glad to." "Beat their records? Lord, yes. Our own too for that matter." "It's a man's size job all right, but of course we get dollars—vulgar word." The last was said with the little laugh of conscious superiority. Dollars! The word alone tells the story. While Moscow and the Soviet Government dig deeply into their pockets for valuta, American technique swings slowly into line to help build a nation. The invading army is made up of American engineers.

Unlike most invaders, however, they come by invitation. At the present time, in the whole of Soviet Russia, there are more than 200 American engineers and technicians, working in one industry and another. They come by twos or threes or by the dozen. Most of the time they do not linger long in Moscow. A few stay on, week after week sometimes, waiting for contracts; competition is keen and not limited to Americans, since British, German, Belgian, French and Swedish firms are also seeking the Russian market. But most of the Americans are not contract seekers. Ordinarily, the contract has already been given, and often by the Russians in America. The engineers are here to carry out its provisions.

While they are in Moscow they live well. Rumor says that they are responsible for the shortage of the finest caviar and the diminishing of the old French wines from the former Czar's cellars. However that may be, the necessity is soon upon them to leave the capital city. The industrial frontiers of the new Russia are in her outlying towns and provinces.

THE new developments in the Ural Mountains are an excellent example. We visited some of them recently with one of the most successful of the Americans working in Russia. Forty-five hours on the Transsiberian International Railway, almost due east of Moscow, brought us to the charming little city of Sverdlovsk, known in the old régime as Ekaterinburg, famous for its revolutionary history since the time of Catherine the Great. For years it was a main stop on the great highway of Siberian exile.

But the drama of Sverdlovsk does not belong to the past alone. Situated as it is in the heart of the Ural Mountains, with their vast resources of coal and iron, marble and granite, all within the radius of a few kilometers, it promises to become the future Chicago of Soviet Russia. Power stations, mines and quarries, metallurgical works and machine building plants are planned for the region. Some of them are already building.

Five miles to the north, on a broad highway leading through the midst of the Siberian forest, and paved, incidentally, with granite rock, one finds one's self in the centre of a huge new development, where office buildings, foundries, machine shops and model workmen's houses are rising in the heart of the pine forest like ant hills in the sand of a Texas prairie. Five years from start to finish, according to the plan of the Soviet Supreme Economic Council, will see the majestic, peaceful forest, where pine and birch trees rise seventy-five to a hundred feet before they branch, turned into a great machine building centre. Concrete buildings, plants and storehouses and a concrete town, all constructed from crushed granite, in straight line buildings with wide windows, will compete with the pines and birches for supremacy.

The time will come when Soviet Russia will supply her own machinery for such enterprises, some of it from these same shops in the Ural Mountains, but at present much of it is coming from America. Much also comes from Germany, but recently the impetus has been toward American technique and methods. An account of a process and equipment planned for lumber drying which "should beat Mr. Ford's records by a whole day" brought our Russian guide to the acme of his pride in the designs for "Uralmachinestroi."

South of Sverdlovsk, about 150 miles, is the little town of Cheliabinsk, built on a broad plain between the mountain ranges. To get there from Sverdlovsk, one must spend the night traveling on a train illuminated by candle light and heated by a large wood-burning stove in one end of each car. One wonders if the stage coach is far behind. But once in Cheliabinsk, the new world again comes into view. Here the American engineer with whom we were traveling reached his particular field of action. In charge of a corps of American and Russian experts, with approximately 10,000 Russian workmen, he will direct the building of an immense new tractor plant. The estimate allows two years to construct and equip a factory expected to produce 50,000 sixty-horsepower tractors a year.

During the day that we were there, while we visited offices, studied plans, tramped over sites and inspected various quarries, the Russian engineers explained the details of the plan. The main shop for assembly will be 1,800 feet long and 400 feet wide. Iron and steel foundries, a forge, storage houses and administration buildings will be on a comparable scale. A village for 40,000 people will be built in the vicinity to accommodate the factory employes, especially the workmen and their families. The total cost of construction for both factory and village is estimated at about $80,000,000.

"In two years we shall begin to produce," the Russians said.

At the end of the day we asked the American for his opinion. "A year and a half will build it, at least to the point of beginning production," he answered unhesitatingly. "We should count on that at home and we can do it as well here." A year and a half might not see the completion of the whole village with its schools, creeches, club, cinema and hospital, its central dining rooms, laundry and co-operative shops. But a year and a half should see the plant ready to produce. Our friend spoke advisedly; he knew the task; he had just completed a similar project in another section of the country and his work there had been extraordinarily successful.

We had first seen the other project four months earlier. Then, on a clear October day, four of us perched on a ramshackle droschki of ancient Russian design had driven about the other big tractor plant, the construction of which the same American had directed, building in record time. That had been in Stalingrad, formerly Tsaritsin, 2,000 kilometers away from Cheliabinsk, down on the lower Volga. The plan is to make of it a manufacturing centre, serving the great steppes which stretch out in limitless plains to the east of the lower and middle Volga.

The tractor plant, "Traktorossible for a color and each putting on her color in turn as the print was passed from hand to hand. Over the lot was a forewoman or finisher, who looked over each print and, if necessary, retouched it.

The finer color work—that on the big folios that were to sell for several dollars a print—was sent out by the piece to more expert colorists. These piece-workers got one cent apiece for coloring smaller prints and $1 a dozen for coloring the large folios. It is thus not hard to figure how all this handwork was brought within the firm's budget and a handsome profit allowed for.

Both the regular colorists in the shop and the specialists outside worked from a model—that is to say, a print colored by the original artist of the picture or some other expert. It is through models of this sort, "trial" models, perhaps, on which notations have been made by one of the members of the firm, that we get a line on how things were done. On a model for the race of "Tacony and Mac," 1853, done by Maurer, the notes direct that the "vest and cap" of the rider of Tacony is to be changed to carmine, and that the saddle cloths be brightened. They say further: "More blue in sky. Get more green in grass. Put more tail on Mac." In the case of the comic, "A Mule Train on an Up-grade" by Worth, "Mr. Cameron" is admonished to plant the feet of the woman who is tugging at the mule between the balking animal's hoofs to get a better effect of being braced for the drag.

According to Mr. Peters, no true color-lithography was ever done in the Currier & Ives plant. He says that the first chromo-lithograph—that is to say a print made from several stones, each printing a different color—was made in this country in 1860, but that the first such chromo-lithograph published by Currier & Ives did not appear until 1889. Then the stones were prepared and the printing done outside for lack of equipment in the home shop. This true chromo-lithograph, by the way, was done from an oil painting by Louis Maurer, then already nearing his 60s, and represented the Futurity at Sheepshead Bay, 1888, won by Proctor Knott. As usual, Maurer was sent out to "get" or "take" the race in person.

THERE is a certain quaintness in the revelation that, while such a point was made of accuracy in homely scenes and accessories and the sort of thing Mrs. Palmer was sent out to present with convincing verisimilitude, both by Maurer and Tait Indians were drawn without any first-hand knowledge of the red man. Maurer's source for the right detail of such pictures was originally the book on Indians by Prince Maximilian of Wied with illustrations by Bodmer. To this authority he was conducted by the busy Mr. Ives, who took him to the Astor Library—it was down in Lafayette Place in those days—for the purpose. For their hunting scenes both artists went to nature. Tait had a camp in the Adirondacks and Maurer went up there and hunted with Tait, but it was not until late in life that the man who has been so fond in his riper years of painting Wild West scenes actually visited the country of the Indian and the cowboy—made a tour of the Canadian Rockies, also touring Arizona and New Mexico.

A phase of this old "print service" which is sometimes overlooked is the picture news service, which was the mid-ninteenth century equivalent of the modern photographic news service operating at the moment by airplane and radio. The beginning of the success of this sort of thing, so far as Currier & Ives were concerned, was getting out three days after the event took place the print entitled "Awful Conflagration of the Steam Boat Lexington in Long Island Sound on Mond'y Even'g, Jan'y 13th, 1840, by which melancholy occurrence over 100 people perished." As originally issued, this picture had attached to it seven columns of letter press, so that it was a sort of broadside. It was labeled "Extra Sun." Afterward pictorial news of sufficiently exciting happenings frequently appeared with equal celerity. The method was to have the picture with the appropriate lettering lithographed on a number of stones and have several presses working at once turning out prints. These "news" prints were not usually in color, for the excellent reason that the process of coloring so many prints held up the issue too long.

No unfairness is done to anybody, I think, in saying that the Currier & Ives print service covered a field now divided among the print dealers, the illustrated Sunday sections in color or rotogravure and the daily picture tabloids. The American comic—which has now become a newspaper specialty—was very successfully indeed taken care of in such series as the Darktown series and the White comics. The only record we have of what may be regarded as a "best-seller edition" from the house is the case of a Darktown print which sold 73,000 copies. An annotated catalogue of 1851 or so shows a long list of titles with numbers attached running up into the 700s. At that time the concern had on hand above 22,000 prints. In their heyday Currier & Ives maintained an office in London and the sale of Curriers abroad was considerable—the comics especially being favored in foreign parts. Even such unlikely groups as the New York "Life of a Fireman" series sometimes turn up in Europe.

A MODERN KING IN OLD ABYSSINIA

To stimulate liberal education he supports a modern school for boys with foreign teachers in Adis Ababa, to which any boy, rich or poor, of any race or creed is eligible.

To promote the development of the land he has provided its occupants with a new security by abolishing the custom of confiscating property as a punishment for any offense. Incorporated in this decree is a deft clause, doubly significant, which enrages the Amharics of all classes. While its purpose is the further stabilization of land-ownership by encouraging monogamy and thus simplifying the laws of inheritance—now in a hopeless tangle—it strikes a second incisive blow at slavery. Officially Christian and therefore officially monogamous, the Amharics, however, recognize three forms of marriage, of which only one is actually binding. Divorce is common. And the maintenance of concubines whose children are slaves is usual. The clause merely states that hereafter illegitimate children may not inherit.

Stultified by isolation, drugged with superstition, with extravagant assumptions of superiority, the Amharics prove difficult to rouse. But, after the manner of heavy sleepers, they have begun to squirm irritably beneath the proddings of Tafari Makonnen. Twice their irritation has flamed into conscious anger. In October, 1928, an attempt was made upon his life. But from the excitements of this spectacular episode, during which he displayed rare courage, the Prince Regent emerged with a new strength.

The unsuccessful assassin took refuge in the mausoleum recently raised above the tomb of the great Menelik, believing that since this building is not only the most sacred in Adis Ababa but one of the most sacred in the whole country, Tafari Makonnen, fearing the anger of Amharics, would not dare fire upon it. But he underestimated the mettle of this man. For Tafari Makonnen, commanding his soldiers in person bade them train machine guns upon the mausoleum, first sending word to the nobleman: "It is I who raised that building up. It is I who will strike it down and raise another."

The nobleman surrendered. As he was Judith's confidant and counselor she was obliged to atone. Reluctantly, at a hasty coronation she crowned her young Prince Regent, creating for him the new title, Negus, King of Kings. Freed from her interference he at once signed the Kellogg peace pact.

Today he is Emperor. The task which he has undertaken is neither a safe nor an easy one. Recently at the time of Judith's death when he mounted the throne he was compelled to put down an armed rebellion of 50,000 men led against him by Judith's exiled husband. Now, as always, the country seethes with political intrigue. If perchance his enemies prevail it will be Ethiopia's loss. For if Tafari Makonnen passes prematurely out of Ethiopia's public life there will pass with him a brave dream, the vision of an Ethiopian renascence.

Deaf Hear Again Through New Aid

Earpiece No Bigger Than Dime Wins Enthusiastic Following Ten-Day Free Trial Offer

After twenty-five years devoted exclusively to the manufacture of scientific hearing-aids, the Dictograph Products Co., Inc., Dept. 265 M, 220 West 42nd Street, New York, N. Y., has just perfected a new model Acousticon that represents the greatest avdance yet made in the re-creation of hearing for the deaf. This latest Acousticon is featured by a tiny earpiece no bigger than a dime. Through this device sounds are clearly and distinctly transmitted to subnormal ears with wonderful benefit to hearing and health alike. The makers offer an absolutely free trial for 10 days to any person who may be interested, and a letter will bring one of these remarkable aids to your home for a thorough and convincing test. Send them your name and address today!—Advt.

Does Your ENGLISH Help or Hurt You?

Does your English reveal your lack of education, or does it prove that you are a person of culture and refinement? Are you handicapped in your speech and writing or does your command of English rise to meet every occasion and every situation? English is the one weapon you must use every day. Learn how you can improve it almost at once.

MANY persons say "Did you hear from him today?" They should say, "Have you heard from him today?" Some persons spell calendar "calender" or "calander." Still others say "between you and I" instead of "between you and me." It is astonishing how many persons use "who" for "whom" and mispronounce the simplest words. Few persons know whether to spell certain words with one or two "c's" or "m's" or "r's" or with "ie" or "ei," and when to use commas in order to make their meaning absolutely clear. And very few persons use any but the most common words—colorless, flat, ordinary. Their speech and their letters are lifeless, monotonous, humdrum.

An unusual command of English enables you to present your ideas clearly, forcefully, convincingly. If your English is incorrect it hurts you more than you will ever know, for people are too polite to tell you about your mistakes.

Wonderful New Invention

For many years Mr. Cody worked on the study of the problem, "How to make correct habits in speaking and writing stick in your mind." After countless experiments he finally invented a simple method by which you can acquire a better command of the English language in only 15 minutes a day. Now you can stop making the mistakes in English which have been hurting you. Mr. Cody's students have secured more improvement in five weeks than had previously been obtained by other pupils in two years!

Learn by Habit—Not by Rules

Under old methods rules are memorized, but correct habits are not formed. Finally the rules themselves are forgotten. The new Sherwin Cody method provides for the formation of correct habits by constantly calling attention only to the mistakes you make.

One of the wonderful things about Mr. Cody's course is the speed with which these habit-forming practice drills can be carried out. You can write the answers to fifty questions in 15 minutes and correct your work in 5 minutes more. The drudgery and work of copying have been ended by Mr. Cody. You concentrate always on your mistakes until it becomes "second nature" to speak and write correctly.

troi," is one of several large manufacturing plants being built in the vicinity.

It was there that we first met and talked with the six American engineers who were working on its construction. Like pioneers of all times, they enjoyed telling about their experiences. Three months earlier, on a hot July day, the whole group of them had arrived in Stalingrad. While the winds from the steppes had burned their faces and innumerable flies and insects had stung them, they had tramped over the unbroken plain along the Volga where they were to build, much as eight months later we paced the fields of Siberian Cheliabinsk.

WORKMEN'S barracks and temporary building shacks had been built in Stalingrad as in Cheliabinsk. Near by, also, great blocks of permanent workmen's houses had been erected. But the plant itself had not been touched. Three months later, at the time of our visit, an assembly shop 1,400 feet long and almost 300 feet wide, of steel and concrete construction, was nearly enclosed. A huge foundry and a forge were well under way. In addition a mile of tunnel, six by eight feet, to carry pipes and wiring, was practically finished. By the first of April the entire plant was to be ready for the installation of machinery, a program which was later beaten by two months.

The stories of the Americans were dramatic. "When we came," the chief explained to us, "we found workmen without even a brace-and-bit. They were boring holes in two-by-four planks by burning them with hot pokers. We found some good tools in town packed away on store shelves, but the men knew nothing about their use. These fellows had never even made a simple chute. They carried sand on their backs down ladders to make concrete for the tunnel. I spent two hours, one morning, trying to persuade them to build a chute. I thought they would never do it, but when they finally did, and it worked, I couldn't stop them. It was all the time 'more chute.'"

Later, answering our question about the quality of Russian workmen, he was enthusiastic. "Yes, they are good workmen. They've got their own ideas, have had them for a thousand years or so, but once they understand what we're after, with our directions they go down a job like lightning. Look at that assembly shop! At the present time it's the largest shop under one roof in the world, and we have put it up in just twenty-eight days to date. That's American tempo for you. The fact is, they've got an idea, you know; the thing is theirs and they work accordingly. I don't pretend to understand them and I don't think it matters whether you agree with them; they get there. It's inconvenient, though, sometimes," he added, laughing. "They are all bosses. Everything has to be talked out if it takes all night. They don't get me to talk, though. I am here to act."

As he spoke, his words and manner told the secret of his success in Soviet Russia and of the success of the others like him who are working in this country. Clean-cut, hard-muscled, clear-eyed, a man of action, not of speech, with a set of the jaw which promised unlimited determination and perseverance, a born pioneer, he had qualities built by long experience and successful work in America which Soviet Russia at the moment needs. Lack of materials, shortage of tools, delays were so many "Russian conditions" to be overcome. Tolerance, good humor and ingenuity were, apparently, the weapons he used. Behind these was the builder's genuine admiration for a pioneering people.

But these plants are only a few out of many. All over the country new factories, new power stations, new railways and whole new towns, with workmen's apartments, schools, clubs, theatres and hospitals are being planned and built. Not everywhere, by any means, does American personnel direct or advise about the work. But in most of the great enterprises, in one form or another, American technique is an element of no mean proportions.

There is Nijni-Novgorod, a thirteenth century fortress city, built high above the Volga with a beautiful old Kremlin and fine old city walls. Nijni-Novgorod will become a new manufacturing centre. Ten miles along the river, in the village of Sormova, which suggests a Western American frontier town of fifty years ago, the largest metal plant in the country, with 18,000 employes, builds ships and locomotives, Diesel engines and tram cars. The old factory, inherited from prerevolutionary days, is being reconstructed and a new section added at an estimated cost, spread over the five-year period, of nearly $50,000,000. The reconstructed plant, nearly half as large again as the old plant, will be "rationalized" according to American methods.

NOT far from Sormova, by an arrangement with the American manufacturer, the building of a new Ford plant is about to begin. "We hope to beat the American record in building it," was the laughing comment of the Russian discussing it with us. "Your time would be about eighteen and a half months. We hope to finish it all in eighteen months." The plan is to build for 140,000 cars a year at an average cost of $700 a car. The cost of building is estimated at approximately $54,000,000. Meanwhile, in both Nijni-Novgorod and in Moscow, plants to assemble Ford cars from American-made parts have been built and are beginning to turn out new Fords.

Many miles to the south is the much discussed project for a hydroelectric power station at Dneprostrol. Here five Americans are directing work on the ground and in the United States a whole organization is supplying designs and materials. The construction is planned to be finished by Dec. 1, 1932, at a total cost of $101,500,000. The cost up to March 31, 1930, had been estimated as $57,500,000.

Perhaps no town summarizes the activities of the new Russia better than Ivanova-Voznessensk, the textile centre and "Red Manchester" of the Soviet Union. In Ivanova three great new textile mills have been erected within the last five years. From the roof of one of them, a few weeks ago, we studied the panorama of the city. On the outskirts of the pre-war town in three directions, silhouetted against a fringe of pine woods, rose the new buildings. Each section seemed to be a unit. In the centre of each was the new mill, its white concrete and glass sparkling in the Winter sunlight. Long line of windows extending from ground floor to roof and roofs peaked with many skylights made the whole of each mill seem to be predominantly of glass.

Around the plants, on broad streets with gardens and playgrounds serving each block, were built the workmen's houses, colorful in red and white stucco or pointed brick. A new schoolhouse, new kindergarten and crèche and a new club were close to each district. A light fall of snow added charm to the picture and softened the lines of new and unfinished work, but without the snow, these buildings would have had beauty of line and color. The use of American building designs combined with the need for cheap construction has not always been happy in Russia. But Ivanova-Vosnessensk has been fortunate. One school house, especially, of pointed red brick, with gabled roofs and overhanging eaves, built in radiation form to secure a maximum of sunlight, would have been a credit to any American school board. The low white crèche not far away, a model building both inside and out, we later discovered, was equally attractive.

The picture of that vigorous, growing little city stays with one. To the American onlooker it suggests a spirit of enterprise and a power of accomplishment that he has learned to associate with the activities and resources of his own people.

HEAVY PENALTIES
await jewel smugglers

SMUGGLING jewelry is dangerous. Rewards for information are large. Penalties are heavy.

Under the Tariff Act of 1922 25 per cent. of the net amount recovered by the Government, but not over $50,000 in any case, may be awarded and paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to any person who furnishes original information which leads to the "recovery of any duties withheld, or any fine, penalty or forfeiture incurred."

The Government can seize jewelry years after it has been smuggled, so that a temporary success at the time of arrival is no security.

Information relating to the smuggling of jewelry may be sent by letter, cable or wireless to this office. The name of the informer will not be divulged even to Government officials. The information will be filed in the name of this Association, and the full reward received from the Government paid to the informer.

nado and their followers penetrated further into the interior they found quantities of gold and silver, and the ships that had gone out bearing explorers came back loaded with wealth. All Spain was seized with the fever. Settlers went out, and they in their turn sent home for tools and goods. Seville became a treasure house, a trading port, a great centre for banking and commerce. Thanks to the riches of Mexico and the gold mines of Peru the revenues of Spain increased thirty-fold within the span of a single reign.

Nor was all the wealth measurable in terms of doubloons and pieces of eight. Knowledge came along with the gold, knowledge of the storms and calms and currents of the western ocean, knowledge of the new continent still called "the Indies." Every ship that went out carried men who were map makers and working scientists as well as priests and explorers and soldiers. Every one that came in brought new woods, plants, foods, information to add to the sum of human knowledge. The Casa de Contratación, which controlled all matters connected with the New World, established courses of research and instruction which gave Seville the most famous maritime university in all Europe.

The stream of gold and knowledge which flowed up the muddy river and across Seville's wharves aroused men to the most tremendous activity. Politically it brought for Spain's King the title of Holy Roman Emperor, and made him ruler over a territory that embraced half the world. It built palaces and monasteries, cathedrals and universities. It provided the Church with an enormous store of jewel-studded vessels and vestments crusted with precious stones. It fertilized men's minds, so that the age became golden with poetry, drama, painting, as well as with material possessions.

THE energy which was generated and the works which resulted have passed into the common heritage of mankind, but you may still find in Seville curious traces of that gigantic stream of wealth. Her private palaces are the most beautiful in Spain, her cathedral one of the richest. The bent little sacristan who presides over the treasure room hidden within its shadowed depths will show you vessels made of the first gold brought from America, chalices studded with jewels, gowns for the Virgin blazing with emeralds and diamonds. And incidentally 80,000 pearls. Here is some of that wealth which has passed from circulation, which is as empty of power, as lustreless, as dead as the pearls' gray surfaces.

Other traces of it line Seville streets and bring much more joy to the hearts of a wandering visitor. Tall, carved doorways and great doors studded with brazen bosses, iron balconies as delicate as lace, tiles that hold the blue of the sky, a graciousness that comes only from the consciousness of wealth and position held so long that it has become unconscious. Even the beggars of Seville are hidalgos.

And then there are the tiled signs set in plaster walls, "In this house the most illustrious son of Spain, Don Miguel de Cervantes Saavedra wrote * * *" whatever chapter of Don Quixote is designated. And lest Seville grow too serious even in matters which are a just cause for pride, a group of loyal but irreverent authors and artists set into the wall of their clubhouse a sign which begins in the same ceremonious fashion, and ends far otherwise. "In this house that most illustrious son of Spain, Don Miguel de Cervantes Saavedra, wrote to our knowledge and belief just exactly nothing at all." It is a salty city, as well as a wealthy one.

There are riches here to suit all tastes. Perhaps the most precious one, from the standpoint of people curious about the details of those magic days, lies in a huge old palace still called by its ancient name the Archives of the Indies. Here are all those maps and reports which the early voyagers, the explorers, the colonial governors sent home, from the first rough pencilings of the coast made by Columbus to the latest detailed descriptions of the interior sent by explorers of South America and our own Southwest. You may turn over map after map and see knowledge grow before your eyes as bays and indentations and mountain ranges back of the coast take the place of what was in that first sketch just a vague shore line. Here are pictures of volcanoes in action, of Indian dancers, of towns in flames. Here are reports on flora and fauna and minerals made for the king by men whose rubricated signatures have made possible volumes of history—Columbus and his scholarly son; Amerigo Vespucci; Magellan, Coronado, the two Cabots, Alarcón, even the Englishman Sir Francis Drake. Here, from the American standpoint, is the document which in its unconscious implications is the most stupendous of all, that papal bull which divided between Spain and Portugal all the lands lying west of the Pillars of Hercules.

All these things came up the Guadalquivir in the holds of galleons, along with gold and silver bars, and whales' bones such as that which still swings in a rusty chain above the cathedral patio. Now the river's cargo is confined to the freight of little boats, which unload their potatoes and wheat, coal, cabbages and hides, just as their predecessors unloaded pearls and plate. Clerks check bags and boxes in the ancient Torre de Oro as clerks checked emeralds from the Americas, or silks and perfumes and female slaves brought long before from Byzantine Greece and the Moslem East.

Yet for all the fame and importance of its river frontage, Seville is not now a genuine river town. The life of the city is a thing of inner streets and patios, of cafés and the bull ring, of whispers behind grilled windows and the sound of a guitar among blossoming orange trees. The river is chiefly a thing one crosses to get to the new airport or the far older gypsy quarter of Triana, to see the crisis of the night in Holy Week when that Virgin called La Macarena is carried home from her triumphal procession through the city and the bridge is filled with banners and faces and waving lights that shine in the water like stars gone mad.

Whether the new order of things will make it a flying town remains to be seen. The landing fields lie two miles and a half from the city, across the river and beyond the furthest edge of the bull-fighters' quarter. Army men and commercial pilots fly back and forth from Madrid and Morocco, and the new airport which was started by an American firm of engineers is taking its slow way to completion. The cornerstone of a permanent mooring mast was laid there a year ago, but construction is still under way. The Zeppelin tied up to a temporary mast. The proposed Europe to South America airship line will have its home station here.

What that may mean to Seville in the future is best shown by a glance at the past. The great free days of loot and adventure are mostly over, but their place has been taken by vast trade possibilities which will grow as South America develops. Aviation experts look forward confidently to a time when express and passengers will move back and forth from Europe to the Americas through the air as normally and simply as they now go from Paris to Croydon. And if that ever-increasing tide should elect Seville as its home port it would mean a rebirth of energy and enterprise such as that lazy, laughing town has not felt since the days of the galleons.

IT is a prospect which alternately appalls and fascinates the city Progress has always come to it. In terms of "urbanizacion," of widened streets and square new hotels looking uncomfortably like North American warehouses, it set in before last year's Hispano-American Exposition had opened its doors. It was just as blind and ruthless as it is in certain picturesque sections of the United States. Whole blocks were torn down and streets laid open to the blazing sun that automobiles might tear along ways meant for nothing wider than a panniered donkey or a portly priest. Even that enchanted quarter called "el barrio de Santa Cruz," where honeysuckle climbs on walls of pink and blue, roses roof the streets and nightingales sing in gardens that Murillo loved, was threatened by destruction masquerading under the name of improvement. Sevillians, who love the ancient beauties and the old traditions of their town, are suspicious of progress, and with cause.

Yet the old traditions also hold those memories of power and wealth, of a time when Seville was one of the greatest cities of the civilized world. If air trade and air travel could restore her to that proud position she might even endure the pangs of progress with equanimity. There is a faction which is quite sure she would.

QUEEN MARY'S TABLE LINEN

BY command of Queen Mary, the table linen at Buckingham Palace, England, was evaluated recently. Comprising hundreds of tablecloths, some of them heirlooms of great historical interest, literally thousands of napkins of the finest quality and other napery, it was pronounced by an expert appraiser to be worth upward of $40,000.

One of the most remarkable items in this collection of royal linen is the "mother cloth" of the palace. This huge linen tablecloth is big enough to cover a table on which 250 places can be laid. It was specially woven for the wedding breakfast of Queen Victoria and is used only on rare occasions. The last time it was in use was at the State banquet given at the palace to the visiting royalty and their suites after the funeral of King Edward.

A legend that had at least one dramatic sequel is connected with this tablecloth. It is said that ill luck will come to the person who chances to spill any liquid on it during a meal. At the State banquet mentioned Kaiser William of Germany was the principal guest. With him were the most important members of his suite, and during the meal one of these German dignitaries accidentally spilled some wine on the cloth.

It was the first time since the tablecloth was made that anything of the kind had happened and superstitious members of the palace staff have often recalled the incident.

Another "treasure cloth" that is never used now, but is kept as an heirloom, is the famous cloth made for the coronation dinner of Queen Anne. This piece is carefully preserved and stored away and is brought forth only for the inspection of favored guests and connoisseurs. The expert declared that at least $2,500 could be obtained for it if offered for sale.

All the royal linen is stored in presses in the linen room of the palace. There are special presses for tablecloths, sheets, table napkins, &c. It is the sole duty of two maids to look after this department.

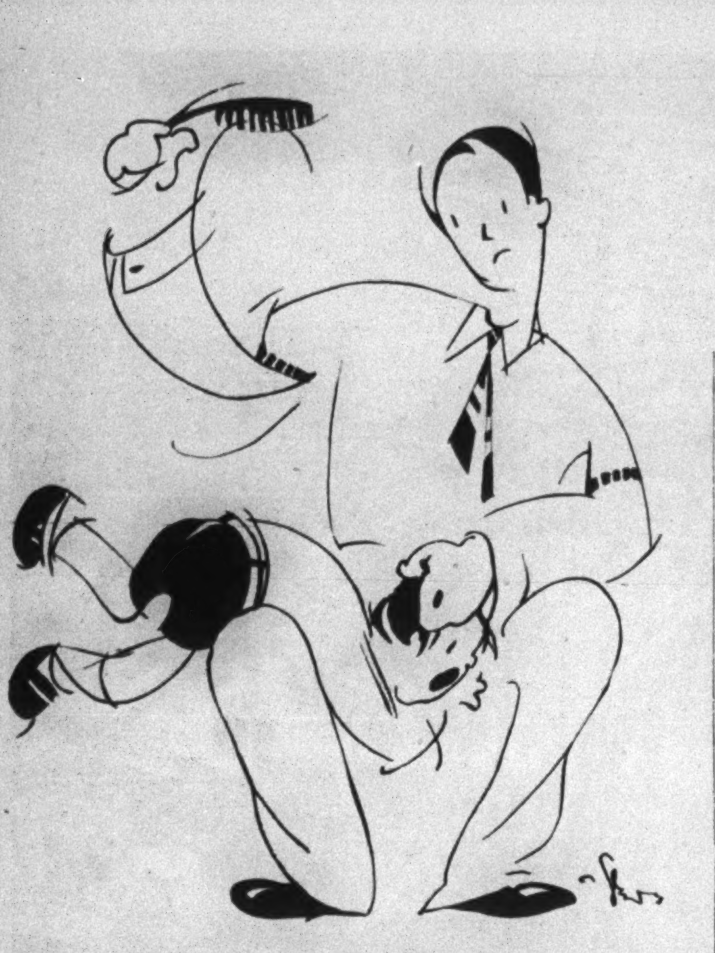
SEEKING A PERFECT CHILD FOR A SPANKLESS AGE

With the "Do's" and "Don'ts" of the New Psychology the Civilizing of the Youngster Is a Thankless Job

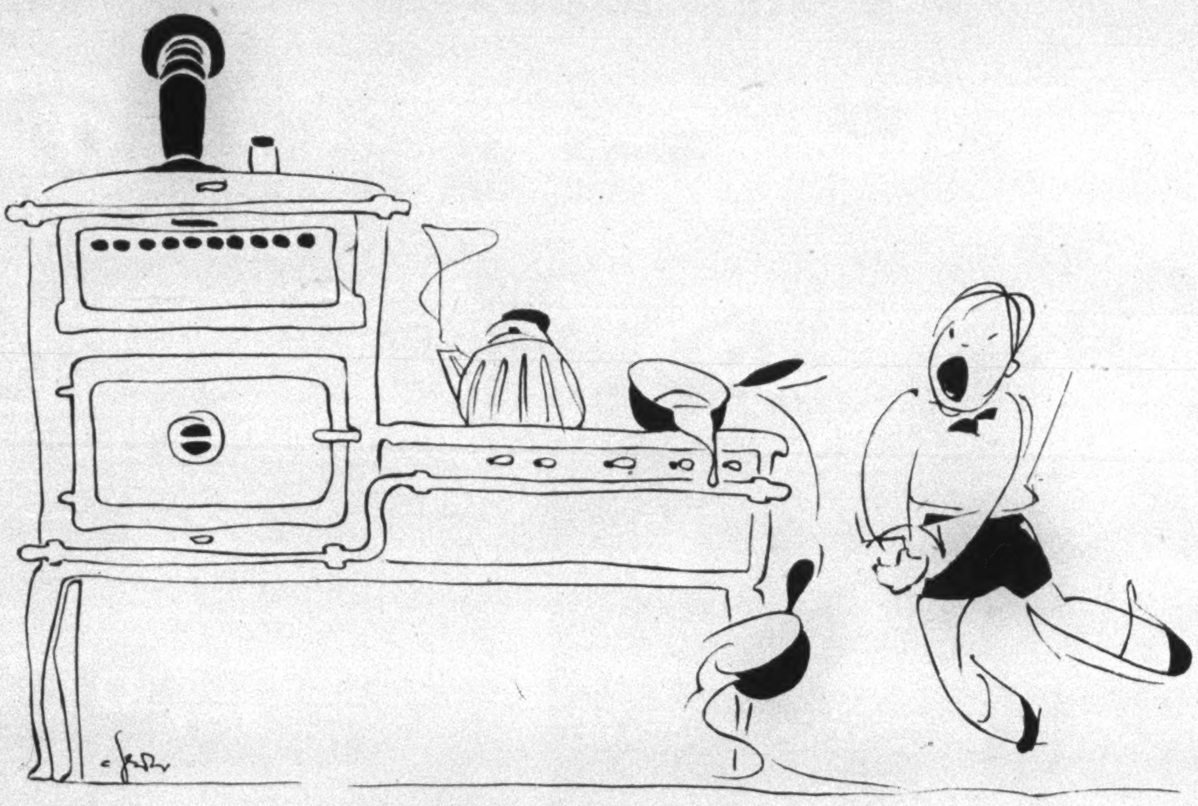


"The Hair Brush Was a Cure-All for Deficiencies of Children."

By GEORGE H. COPELAND

AFTER some years of research, annoying and sometimes painful to the parties concerned, the formula for the determination of a perfect child has been found. To those grouchy persons who would apply to a small and lively child the old Colonial proverb about what constitutes a good Indian, the answer was recently given in no uncertain terms by Teachers College. There is such a thing as a perfect child.

The ordinary parent of today may be satisfied if Oswald or Letitia gets through the day without having more than a dozen cries and fights; without leaving sweaters or rubbers in the park, and without making life miserable for the cat or breaking a chair or two. But the educator, as judged from the recent Teachers College "Inventory of the Habits of Children from 2 to 5 Years of Age" seeks for something more—for perfection in the superlative.



"Help About the Home—Ten Points."

To come up to this standard the young citizen of today must be versatile. "The perfect child shows friendliness to all," recognizes the rights of others, says "please," and accepts punishment without kicking, screaming or sulking. He buttons his own buttons, can climb a rope or "jungle gym," fasten his own zipper galoshes, dress a doll and use a hammer without hitting the nail on the thumb. He hangs his coat up straight, responds to a humorous situation and shows that he knows when it is safe to cross the street—if ever. He enjoys his food, goes to school willingly and remains calm during thunderstorms.

In the Teachers College inventory there are 1,191 questions testing out the child to see whether he comes up to scratch. Hunting the perfect child is as difficult as finding the guilty person in some of our modern mystery stories; in the inventory there is a scoring system as complicated as that used in contract bridge.

But in all the discussion of what constitutes a perfect child there is one small item which has been carelessly overlooked or studiously avoided. There has been no mention of where to locate a perfect child or of how to make an imperfect child perfect. And although modern education has been singularly inventive in devising intelligence tests and whatnots to determine a child's place in the world, means and methods of making him rate perfect in these tests have not been so abundant.

That the child must "express himself" is emphatically stated by supporters of the modern progressive school. But the difficulty in many forms of self-expression is that it may bring the expressor up against another who is trying to express himself along the same lines and in the same place. A feather, physics tells us, weighs the same as a piece of lead when both articles are in a vacuum. In the same way, a child's actions may approach perfection as long as he does not bump into others. Johnny may run around the living room in perfect form, but when he crashes onto his grandfather's toes or knocks over the floor lamp he is considered—by the family, anyway—to have scored something less than 100 per cent in motor activity.

IT was not so long ago that the rod, razor strop or hair brush was regarded as a cure-all for the deficiencies of children. Spanking was not only a means to curb naughtiness in the home; it was frequently resorted to in the school as a punishment for inattention or mischievousness, and even to beat knowledge into slow understandings. But modern education has lost faith in the old-fashioned paddling. Authorities in the new methods are almost unanimously in favor of its repeal, and some even hold that it hurts the parents more than the child—even if not in the same place. Spanking has gone the way of the buggy-ride and the hobble-skirt.

"In general, I should say that the feeling of those who have much contact with children is that corporal punishment is a type of procedure which should be used with great care," says Dr. John E. Anderson of the University of Minnesota's Institute of Child Welfare. "But usually the reverse is true. Instead of being the first method which occurs to one or is tried out in the situation, it should be the last method to be tried. In 90 to 95 per cent of the situations in which corporal punishment is used, a more skillful handler of children could have achieved the same results by the use of other methods. In general, the necessity for corporal punishment indicates a rather serious breakdown in the general disciplinary relationship which probably would not have arisen had the general situation been handled effectively.

"The effect of corporal punishment as ordinarily administered is more harmful to the parent than to the child in the long run. In other words, it is the quick and easy method of meeting situations and, when used, tends to become the habitual method, thus keeping the parent from making the proper analysis and study of the situation which the child faces."

Dr. Arnold Gesell, director of the Psycho-Educational Clinic of Yale University, says: "Sparing the rod has spoiled fewer children than a lack of understanding on the part of parents. In almost every case the whipping of children is an error. Parents are ready enough to grant that children must proceed by slow degrees in the learning of arithmetic, reading and spelling; but in the field of social endeavor—in matters of obedience, tidiness and truth—these same parents often assume a rigorous ethical attitude which exacts more than the child mind can meet."

These statements are typical of modern education's attitude toward the spanking problem. "The resort to corporal punishment should be frankly recognized as a failure of the parent to meet a situation in a more logical and fundamental manner," says Dr. Lawson G. Lowrey, director of the Institute for Child Guidance of New York. "Preventive measures take the place of punishment," says Sidonie M. Gruenberg, director of the Child Study Association of America. "When a child commits a misdeed, the 'newer ways of discipline' (i. e., modern psychology) point toward looking into the cause of the difficulty and proceeding from there with positive guidance and the building up of attitudes which make for self-discipline or self-guidance."

Dr. Frank N. Freeman of the University of Chicago's School of Education is not so certain about the abolishment of the old standby. "It is, I think, generally agreed that punishment is not, in most cases, a suitable method of promoting learning," he says. "It engenders a repugnance to learning instead of pleasure in it. * * * If control is to be exercised, the practical question arises as to what means are most effective. There is no reason why corporal punishment should be put in a class by itself. With the young child spanking is often a more direct method of establishing control and it may entail less danger of resentment or fear than other methods which are sometimes regarded as more humane."

Modern education has been firm in advocating the abolition of spanking as a method of attaining perfection, but it has been rather hazy in the matter of substitutes. Even the system of "rewards and punishments" is questioned. When mother gives little Mary a penny for keeping her room neat for the day, the time will come when the bargain instinct—so useful in later shopping days—will find expression. The child weighs the work necessary in putting away her toys and clothes against the penny, and decides she will not do it for less than three pennies: one penny is not so much. And if parent and child meet in a bargain, the mother is lost. For, say the new educators, bargain will follow bargain, and when the reward is withdrawn, as eventually it must be, the "prop" goes and the tree will fall.

Opposed to this view are those who think it a good idea to inculcate the principles of thrift, carefulness and efficiency among the young. They think it pays, financially and

FAMOUS OLD WORLD CLOCKS

Modern Germany Treasures These Relics of Craftsmen Who Worked Centuries Ago

TOWN clocks round which angels and kings parade on the hour are among the best-loved relics of the Middle Ages and the Renaissance treasured today by a modern and industrialized Germany. Strasbourg, Nuremberg, Ulm, Jena and Lübeck are some of the old cities which pride themselves on the intricate clocks that decorate their Rathauses or minsters.

The oldest, and perhaps most complicated in point of evolutions performed, is the clock in the tower of the minster at Strasbourg, now a French city. This clock was first built in 1352 and improved and enlarged in 1547 and again in 1789. Seven figures representing the days of the week take their places one after another to stand for a day each before the clock face. Two angels stand on either side to strike the quarter hours, while figures representing the four ages of man successively appear as the angels strike. Death appears to ring the hour, and at noon the Twelve Apostles file by, crossing themselves and turning to bow to the assembled populace as they reach the centre of their course. That is, eleven apostles turn and bow: the twelfth, the Judas, sneaks past and refuses to show his face.

Nuremberg is proud of the clock that stands in the Frauenkirche tower and shows the Emperor Charles IV remitting the Golden Bull while angels look on and glorify his name. This clock, which was first built between 1356 and 1361, finally rusted and stopped running at the beginning of the sixteenth century. The records in Nuremberg show that Joerg Heuss, famed clockmaker, rebuilt this timepiece in 1506, receiving for his labors the enormous sum of 6,141 guilders.

The signs of the zodiac march round the Rathaus clock in Ulm, and serve to decorate the ambitious timepiece which reaches from the second to the fifth story of the Heilbronn Rathaus. An angel stands in a niche at one side of the Heilbronn clock, with an hour-glass in his hand; on the other side is another angel who blows the trumpet-call once an hour.

The most famous small clock is that known as the "Schnapphans" in Jena's Rathaus. Just before the hour strikes, an angel rings a small bell while a saint on the other side of the face reaches an apple on the end of his staff toward the devil, whose head just shows beneath the feet of the saint and the angel. As the devil opens his mouth, the wary saint draws the apple back and the devil must wait another hour before trying again for the tempting morsel.

A skeleton nods its head solemnly and turns an hour-glass when the hour strikes at Ochsenfurt on the Main, while at the same time the figure of a long dead burgomaster with a long white beard opens and closes his mouth several times. Two windows above the burgomaster's head fly open and two city fathers lean out to listen to the words the burgomaster has been pondering for an hour. A third window springs open revealing a maiden who points proudly to the coat of arms of the city. This clock was built in 1505.

At noon in Lübeck an angel with a flashing sword pursues a lion, who blinks his eyes apprehensively although never in the 325 years since the angel took up the pursuit have one of the deadly blows landed. The Virgin Mary looks on with interest, dandling the infant Jesus in the crook of her arm.

Aalen in Württemberg commemorates the terrors of the Thirty Years' War by having the lookout step out in front of the Rathaus clock every hour and gaze to right and left.

AMY JOHNSON FLIES TO FAME

she expected him to buy an airplane for her. She knew the exact machine she wanted and the cost. It was a two-year-old Handley-Page Moth, owned by Captain W. L. Hope, who already had done 35,000 miles in it on all sorts of jobs from racing to carrying newspapers.

Having exploded this bombshell, she returned to London, leaving her somewhat staggered parents to think it over. Details of the route and organization were already worked out to the smallest item. She had studied the route so well it was already as good as flown as far as India. All she lacked was financial support. Everything was planned, but she had not a penny to carry out her plans.

Back in London, she began going the customary rounds. Everybody was polite to her, everybody patted her on the back and advised her "Better go to Australia by steamer, my girl. You would be foolish to try to fly there."

She tried Lord Wakefield, head of a big lubricating oil firm and a traditional good uncle in such matters. Lord Wakefield did his best to dissuade her. She tried the Australian High Commissioner, Sir Granville Ryrie, who told her a story about the red Indian who tried to stop an express train on the prairie. "Everybody admired his courage but not his judgment," said Sir Granville.

She tried Sir Sefton Brancker, chief of the Civilian Aviation Ministry, who sent her back to Lord Wakefield with such a eulogy that Lord Wakefield finally surrendered and promised to guarantee her petrol supplies. That was about £300 of expense off her shoulders.

That was a start at least. Then she tried Fleet Street. Fleet Street is fairly well accustomed to unknowns willing to ride bicycles to the North Pole or walk across Siberia on their hands and knees, fly to Australia or do anything else in return for a cash advance on "the story." Fleet Street's sole anxiety was to dissuade her, for nobody liked to participate in the responsibility for such a perilous voyage.

Having had no luck in dissuading her Fleet Street necessarily left her to her fate. The last word Fleet Street had from her before she started was a letter she wrote to Tom Clarke, editor of The Daily News, protesting against his announcement of the flight:

"I am not 23 and my age is of no importance. The longest flight I have done is not 200 miles. Anyhow, London to Hull is only 147 miles by air. I am not making a high speed flight and although I have a large fuel capacity I do not intend making 1,000-mile non-stop hops. My ambition is not to surpass the record time set up by Mr. Hinkler—in fact, I am positively certain that his time cannot be surpassed in a light airplane. My route is not across France and Italy and I don't touch Egypt.

"Yours truly, AMY JOHNSON."

How she finally pulled it off nobody quite knows, but it is supposed the airplane was bought at a cost of about $3,000 by her father and Lord Wakefield jointly. But nobody is worrying about that now. Fleet Street is too busy apologizing to her. The Daily Mail has cabled to her $50,000, "the largest amount ever paid to any woman for a feat of daring."

acclaim this modern tooth paste at 25¢

DO you know of one good reason why you should pay more than 25¢ for a quality tooth paste?

We don't; and we have been studying tooth pastes of all kinds for 20 years. We have learned that all are basically alike—and that, at 25¢, should leave ample profit to the manufacturer.

In Listerine Tooth Paste we offer a dentifrice of outstanding quality—one in every way worthy of the Listerine name. That you can obtain it at 25¢ is due to our ability to buy ingredients in quantity, and to modern production methods which eliminate every unnecessary expense. Why not switch to Listerine Tooth Paste for one month and let it prove its own merits?

Note how swiftly but how gently it erases discolorations and tartar. See how its mild polishing and cleansing ingredients penetrate those hard-to-get-at crevices between the teeth and remove decaying matter. Note that wonderful feeling of health and invigoration that comes to your mouth after you have used it. Then reflect that these benefits are yours for $3 a year —about half of what you usually pay. AMY JOHNSON WINGS HER WAY TO FAME

Aviation's Newest Heroine a London Secretary Who Quit Her Dull Job to Seek Adventure in the Air

By CLAIR PRICE

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON.

AMONG the tens of thousands of Miss Johnsons who fill London's tubes on the way to work as clerks, typists and secretaries every weekday morning, there is one Miss Johnson missing. This particular Miss Johnson had a good job as secretary to a London law firm, but a month ago she quit for no apparent reason and later flew 10,000 miles to Australia alone in a second-hand airplane—a feat of such courage that her safe arrival has set Australia rocking to the swing of a new song, "Johnny's in Town," while the mention of her name makes Fleet Street stammer confused apologies.

Fleet Street remembers her only a month ago as a slight, blue-eyed, fair-haired girl with an air of almost masculine strength and will power and an independent, haughty way of tossing her head and swinging her long eardrops as if to say: "You may not believe me but I can do it."

Fleet Street frankly did not think much of her. It had never heard of her and had not the faintest idea she would ever reach Australia. So Fleet Street unanimously turned down all her offers to sell her "story" in advance. Staggered, confused and apologetic, Fleet Street is attired today in sack cloth and ashes.

Until a month ago this particular Miss Johnson was not different from the tens of thousands of other Miss Johnsons who fill London tubes and buses at the rush hour. Her father is a fish merchant at St. Andrew's Dock, Hull. There is nothing odd in that. She used to be a Sunday school teacher in the Wesleyan Church, Hull. In 1922 she went to Sheffield University and stayed three years. She intended to teach school but changed her mind and came to London in 1925. She held three secretarial jobs one after another. She is now 27.

WHEN she left Croydon for Australia a month ago she knew only one Australian, a woman in Sydney to whom she carried a letter of introduction. But before she leaves Australia for London she seems likely to know 6,000,000 Australians—the number being limited only by the fact that there are no more than 6,000,000 Australians in all Australia.

What was the hidden fire within her which drove her out of the secure rut of a London job and through one of the most astonishing flights in the history of aviation? An amateur pilot with one engine and no wireless, she started alone. Her own pilot, her own mechanic, her own navigator, she tackled one of the world's most terrible air lanes, previously flown only by the most skillful of professional pilots—an air lane three times as long as the transatlantic flight. Having never done a longer single flight than from London to Hull, 150 miles, she broke all solo records by reaching India in six days, and suddenly, while the world sat up and watched, the girl who had done only ninety hours' flying in all her life reached Australia in twenty days, of which the last ten days were spent in groping over tropic seas and jungles, blinded and bumped about by the father and mother of all monsoons.

Attempts are being made to discover evidence of a hereditary love of adventure in her flight. It is said she is of Danish descent, that her grandfather was one Andreis Jorgensen who ran away to sea at the age of 16, settled in Hull, anglicized his name to Johnson and went into the fish business. Her father joined the Klondyke gold rush in 1897 before returning to Hull to carry on the fish business.

Maybe there is something in this. Maybe she did inherit the love of adventure in Viking blood. From the day in 1925 when she took her younger sister Molly for a five shilling circus flight over Hull—the first time she ever set foot in an airplane—she has been possessed by the sheer love of flying. The sensation of climbing high into the blue through piled domes of white cloud, tumbling down toward the green map far below, straightening out for a long swoop which left the tiny train below at a standstill—this was the life. It was more than that. To her it was a form of super-life, immeasurably removed from the ant-like crawl of the streets. It was like hailing a cloud and jumping on it. But flying is a luxury and she had no money for luxuries.

In September, 1928, less than two years ago, she went to Stag Lane airdrome and found she could join the London Airplane Club cheaply. She then knew nothing about airplanes. She went to the airdrome alone. Captain F. F. Matthews, the club's flying instructor, took her for a first flight as a pupil and flew around the airdrome for half an hour. Then she was left alone.

As a rule there are two kinds of fliers—those who succeed in learning how to fly and those whom nothing on earth can prevent from flying. From the first Miss Johnson belonged to the latter class. Instructors learn to spot such finds quickly.

"I knew she was going to fly an hour after she came to me," Captain Matthews says of her. But she was still one of the tens of thousands of London's inconspicuous Miss Johnsons. From 9 o'clock to 5 daily she worked for a London law firm as all other Miss Johnsons do. She had found, however, she could save ten shillings a week from her wages and so could pay one pound every fortnight for half an hour's flying lesson. She stopped swimming, tennis and dancing. An office chair is never comfortable after the first flying lesson, but she stuck to her job because it was her only means of paying her flying instructor.

Most pilots do not know why their machines fly in the air. They only know they do fly. Miss Johnson was more relentless in her stalking of aviation. She wanted to know the theory of flying and all about it. She soon formed an idea that she wanted some sort of flying career, she did not quite know what—possibly as an airplane saleswoman, possibly as a professional pilot.

From that moment she began leading a kind of double life. From 9 o'clock to 5 she was one of the innumerable Miss Johnsons who brighten London's somewhat dingy offices. From 6 o'clock to 9 in the morning and from 5 o'clock to midnight she was disguised in men's dungarees and smeared from head to foot with engine oil.

To the other Miss Johnsons of London offices hundred-horsepower airplane engines are as intelligible as so many wildcats. But this oil-smeared figure in dungarees already had an idea that a large part of her life would be spent at the mercy of one of these deafening engines, spent with the faint blur of a whirling propeller before her, at its centre a black, bubbling, oily mass of cylinders with little pins moving frantically in and out. So she asked to be allowed to work on engine maintenance and rigging under C. S. Humphreys, the flying club's ground engineer.

She became one of Humphreys's apprentices, spending all her spare time except her flying lessons in pulling down engines, decarbonizing them and building them up again. She learned about the carburetor, how to fit new jets, how to strip and rebuild a magneto and to do running repairs. Then she went on to the body of the airplane, one day taking a wing off, the next day the tail. She learned to do everything for herself.

"Ordinarily we don't like women here, they can be so irritatingly helpless where machinery is concerned," Humphreys says of her. "But 'Johnny' is different. She came in like one of the boys. She did every blessed thing for herself, she never got out of anything because she was a girl. More than that, she used to take her turn with the boxing gloves and get knocked all over the hangar. She was physically strong, but we toughened her.

"You can tell what she is like now by her flight. You have to have tremendous physical endurance to make such a flight. You not only have to pilot the machine and read the maps, but also to be continually pumping petrol from the supply tank to the feed tanks. After three and a half hours of flying, pumping begins. You have to make 3,000 strokes with the right arm to pump fifty gallons into the feed tanks. And when you've flown nine or so hours you have to spend half the night overhauling the machine. You're lucky if you get three hours' sleep."

It was on Sept. 15, 1928, that Miss Johnson made her first flight as a pupil. There was much wind, rain and fog in the succeeding months but she succeeded in doing fifteen hours and forty-five minutes of dual control flying before she made her first solo flight on June 9, 1929. On June 26, she passed for a private pilot's license and soon afterward passed for a ground engineer's license—the first woman in England to win the latter.

All that is less than a year ago. At dawn on May 5, less than a month ago, when she kicked off for Australia, her total of flying time, including dual-control flying as a pupil, was ninety hours and forty-five minutes. One purpose of her great flight was to fill 100 hours' flying, necessary to get a commercial pilot's license. She was studying navigation but had not sat for the examination, so the flight was made without a navigator's ticket.

BESIDES the love of flying which burned at white heat within her there was another fire of perhaps a redder glow. Methodical, fearless, unromantic—yet with a normal liking for pretty dance frocks—she had learned boxing and jiu-jitsu. She had stuck up a row of medicine bottles on the Hull beach and smashed them at sixty paces with her own revolver. She learned to take care of herself as well as most men, but she always felt that the instant she left her typewriter, the instant she ceased to be one of the tens of thousands of humble Miss Johnsons, the men would refuse to take her seriously.

Little by little the feeling burned itself into her that if she achieved the goal on which her heart was set, if she, for example, became an airplane saleswoman, a prospective customer would object to being taken for trial flights by a "mere woman." There is a streak of bitterness in her, the bitterness of the sex which sometimes feels itself economically cribbed and cabined and warned off occupations which men created and men monopolize. Out of this very bitterness her great flight sprung.

By a single meteoric feat she would compel the world to take her seriously, she thought. Two months ago, when the news of her plans first leaked out, a newspaper quoted a certain professional pilot in Sydney as saying: "It's all hot air for a girl to be talking of such a flight." Miss Johnson cut out the clipping and kept it, saying, according to friends: "I'll fly to Sydney and throw it in his face." And she did not smile when she said it.

At Stag Lane airdrome a secret is always well kept. There was a vague feeling a few days before her departure that something big was in the air, but only Matthews and Humphreys, whose advice she asked, really knew. The first her parents knew of her daring plan was last Winter, when she unexpectedly went home one week-end, summoned a council of the entire family in the drawing room and announced that she had decided on the flight and informed her father

NEW GERMAN POCKET APPARATUS AIDS THE DEAFENED

An electrical appliance that can be conveniently carried in the pocket is a new boon to the deafened. This newcomer, TEUTONOPHONE, a product of post-war Germany, is demonstrated and distributed by Teutonophone, Inc., Suite 306, 25 West 43rd Street, New York City.

The TEUTONOPHONE amplifies sound to the point of audibility for even those who have left but a small percentage of hearing. The increased volume, clear as a bell, has a mellowness of tone never before attained. One TEUTONOPHONE model with a button-like transmitter the size of a half dollar, and an earpiece small enough to be worn inside the ear (without a headband), weighs but two ounces.

While the TEUTONOPHONE is superbly made and finished, it is offered to the deafened public at unprecedentedly low prices. To appreciate fully the comfort and benefit the TEUTONOPHONE offers, an actual test is essential—demonstration is revelation. The distributors will demonstrate the TEUTONOPHONE at their offices, or mail complete information upon request.

Teutonophone is also available in

Not Long Ago Its Popular Hits, Folksongs and Opera Arias Sounded Through the Streets of New York, but Few Are Heard Now

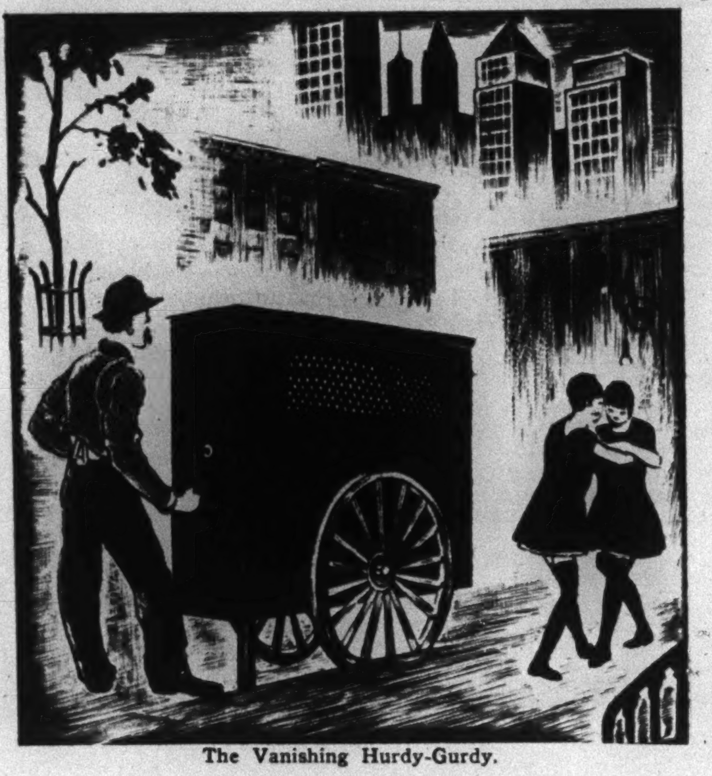
By EDITH TWEDDELL

A DEPLETED troop of hurdy-gurdies, the last of the race in Manhattan, welcomed Spring this year. There was a time when more than 300 joyous street pianos cruised the island and rained hallelujahs on rich and poor alike, but times have changed. It will not be many years before oblivion overtakes this historic child of the streets.

Not till the first day of March did the street-piano player dust off his machine—stored back of City Hall in all likelihood, or up near 105th Street and Second Avenue—and consider what new tunes he would have this year. The taste in popular music changes so rapidly that he would not even consider the matter till that time.

The workshops where they are installed once did a roaring business on the heels of Winter; now it is greatly diminished. Round to the corner music shop rushed their music man to confer on the most likely hits of the coming season. They must be good sellers and likely to last in the public favor for a few months at least; because the work is expensive, and no machine holds more than ten pieces.

In addition to some new Spring favorites, we shall probably be cheered this year by recent gems, such as "Does an Elephant Love Peanuts," "Painting the Clouds With Sunshine," "Weary River," et al., interspersed with "Napoli," the indispensable Irish waltz, and possibly an aria or two from Italian opera.



The Vanishing Hurdy-Gurdy.
A Drawing by George E. Hole.

In the late '80s they would have chosen "The Flowers That Bloom in the Spring, Tra-la," from "The Mikado"; in the early '90s one piece certainly would have been "Ta-ra-ra-boom-de-ay." Unlike most popular tunes which last no more than a season in public favor and are termed "one-day flies" by the trade, the latter was sung for five joyous years of the mauve decade. "Annie Rooney" lasted a good three or four, but "The Bowery," "Two Little Girls in Blue" and "After the Ball" came and went with little more hesitation than the jazz favorites of today.

In 1891 "Cavalleria Rusticana" made its bow, and there was not a hurdy-gurdy in the country that went out unarmed with the "Intermezzo." "Il Trovatore" had contributed "Ai Nostri Monte," and the "Miserere," "L'Annel ti dono," from "La Somnambula," was a great favorite.

IN the old days six workshops thrived in Manhattan alone, making their own street-pianos and doing a steady trade in tune rolls. There were three or four in Brooklyn, and three in Philadelphia. While these pianos were sent to many of the big Eastern centres, and to some Western ones, they have always been typical of New York City in particular. Every machine sold in the country had to be returned to the mother-shop for the insertion of new tune-rolls.

Fine weather even in midwinter charmed the street-pianos out of their lofts and sent them hunting coppers through the streets; but in Spring they swarmed like rabbits from their burrows and wandered far afield.

When warm breezes from New Jersey teased the newspapers down the side streets and pussy-willows bloomed on the uptown dumps, the hurdy-gurdy man packed up his clothing in a red cotton handkerchief, and with a large square of oil cloth to protect himself and his piano from the ravages of mosquitos and thunderstorms he set off to see the country.

All through the Eastern States he wandered in the days when music was rare and folks were glad to see him. Except for church music on Sundays they had to supply their own—which was the reason why at least one daughter of every family was cudgeled into taking piano lessons. They had little money, these people, not nearly so much as people have now, but they gave what they could.

It was a treat for the village when a dusty Italian trudged round the bend of the road behind his piano and came to a stop at the grocery store. Children were drawn like steel chips to a magnet when the first strains of music rang out. Housewives, shopkeepers, and workmen, living less on schedule in those days, paused in little groups to listen, and found themselves nodding their heads and stamping their feet in time. But the hurdy-gurdy man was a will o' the wisp, and would never stay long in one place. With a grin to the older folk, and a last tune to please the children, he unscrewed his little crank, and putting it away in the box at the side of his machine, he picked up the shafts and was off down the road.

At night a friendly barn or a haymow in the open fields offered lodging. After a brief supper of bread, bologna and wine the oilcloth was unfolded and spread over the piano, the player crawling under what was left of it on the side.

Although the instrument made in America is a good deal smaller than the product of the old country, it is an unwieldy traveling companion. Tales are heard of violin and guitar players circling the globe; there is one of a concertina man who made his way unharmed from Italy to China and back. But the heavy hurdy-gurdy, except when it is drawn by a horse, is primarily adapted to the city streets, so it is doubtful if its travels ever rivaled those of the smaller instruments. For the same reason a hand organ was a far more familiar sight to Western children than was the hurdy-gurdy, even in its prime.

Among the older players who live to tell the tale is Antonio di Stefano, who arrived in America just three days before the blizzard of 1888 and set up his abode in a room back of Molinari's workshop on Elizabeth Street. Tony had as intimate a connection with the adolescence and the heyday of the street piano in America as any man alive today. For thirty years he played it, and when Summer came he toured through New York, Ohio and points south as far as Norfolk, Va. But Tony is not pastoral in his tastes, and sleeping on a haymow or under a tree was never to his liking. He went by rail to the various towns and slept at inns by night.

The first decade of the new century saw automobiles come into general use, gradually choking off the profession of street playing. The second saw prohibition, which closed the swinging doors on the street corner and cut peek-holes in the more massive portals in the middle of the block. Speakeasies, unlike saloons, do not welcome the advances of the hurdy-gurdy man, and those within find it more difficult to throw a bit of silver through the peekhole than it ever was under the swinging door. The street player's finest market was gone. The year 1920 registered only ninety-three hurdy-gurdies.

As for the workshops, they closed down right and left, leaving three to carry on the business for the whole country. Ed Molinari keeps up his father's shop in Brooklyn, Capra of Philadelphia has not yet struck his colors, and the B. A. B. Organ Company still exists in New York down on Water Street.

The hurdy-gurdy personnel is discouraged, and gradually turning to other vocations, although there are a couple of loyal souls back of the City Hall who refuse to give up their art. On fine Winter days they wheel out their pianos and play for the more ready appreciation of their countrymen. In stormy weather they hibernate in the middle of the block and arise late of a morning.

LITTLE ITALY still welcomes the songs of its own people, as do the Irish, the Germans, the Spaniards. "They give 5 cents, a dime if they can give money. But uptown rich people's children, they give us pennies!"

As for their views on jazz, the men who have grown up in the profession—men like Dominick Brugnolotti of the B. A. B. Organ Company—who are conversant with the favorite songs of some five or six countries, who know arias from all of the well-known operas and the history of popular music for the last forty or fifty years, have an utter contempt for it. Tony di Stefano curls his lip when you mention it. "You go tck-tck-tck like a monkey, you call that music?" He laughed and leaned back in his chair.

Nor have they much use for radio, which, they say, absorbs the overtones, the aroma of the music and delivers it to you canned.

"It is like spaghetti in tins," said Mr. Brugnolotti thoughtfully. "Have you ever eaten it? It does not go to the heart."

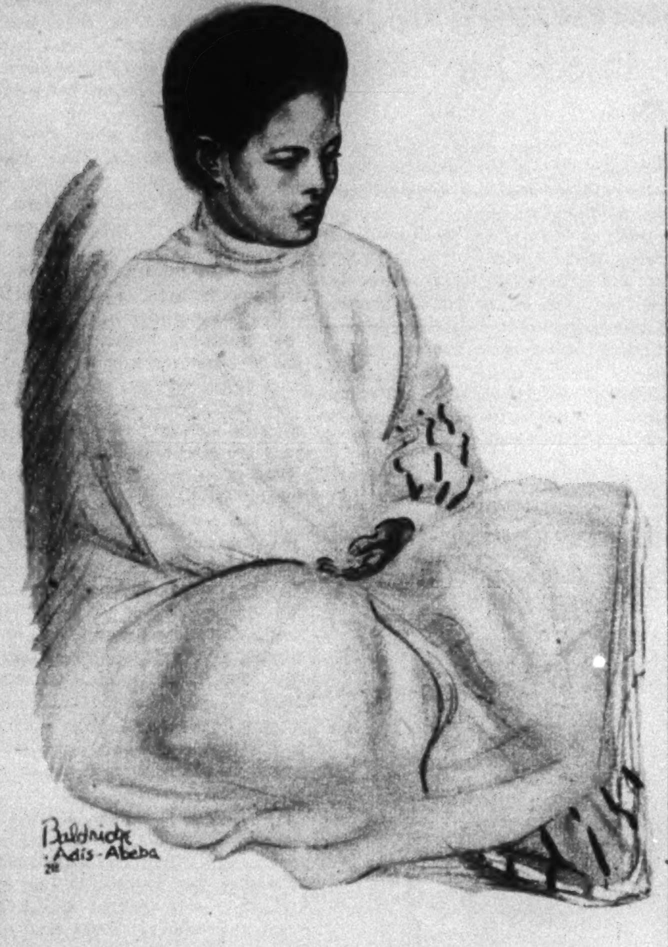
A MODERN EMPEROR IN ANCIENT ABYSSINIA

Tafari Makonnen Has Before Him the Task of Making His Wary, Sullen People Accept His Progressive Ideas



Amharic Women Give an Impression of Dignity.

By CAROLINE SINGER

TAFARI MAKONNEN, new Emperor of Ethiopia, or Abyssinia, as the country is often called, Lion of the Tribe of Judah, Lord King of Kings, 40 years old, is an arresting figure. In sharp relief he stands out against his semi-barbarous background. Considered by his countless enemies a dangerous and annoying visionary or greedy opportunist, he is esteemed by his handful of loyal adherents—a negligible minority—as a practical statesman. Elsewhere in the world the clash between new ideas and old is a conflict between opposing factions. In Ethiopia, however, the struggle exists between this ruler and 10,000,000 subjects, peoples of different races loosely united—but fundamentally antagonistic—speaking different tongues, worshiping different gods and scattered throughout 400,000 square miles of undeveloped country almost destitute of communications.

It is a clash between a man who believes that Ethiopia as an independent nation, recognized by the League, must awaken from its lethargy and acknowledge obligations toward civilization, and a culturally backward people who, like the late Empress Judith—throughout her brief reign a stubborn and bewildered foe to change—are satisfied with the status quo. Feudal lords governing ignorant peasants, wild nomads, proud Moslems, Arab half-castes, are either unaware or reluctant to admit that Ethiopia's internal affairs concern the outside world in which they have no interest. But on the rubble streets of Adis Ababa, the capital, American motor cars using gasoline at $1 a gallon now jostle and terrify burden-bearing human beings, loaded camels and asses; stampede cattle brought in great droves to drink the salty mineral water of natural springs. New ideas promulgated by the young man in the palace, a lonely and courageous man, jostle old ideas. And this jostling reverberates faintly throughout the country.

On every side Ethiopia is surrounded by white colonial territory. The inland capital, 8,000 feet above the sea, was founded less than a half-century ago by the famous warring chieftain, Emperor Menelik, after Italy's defeat. Before the era of tanks and planes he warily selected this remote site, surrounded on every side by staring plains, cut off from the white colonies by vast waterless stretches of desert.

To the capital's motley pageant there is no better introduction than the railroad trip from Jibuti, the French port on the Red Sea. Through country which looks like Utah, like Nevada, Arizona and New Mexico, the train jogs, routing herds of gazelles, putting to flight countless brilliantly plumaged birds, startling grazing camels or lean cattle tended by naked children of the wandering tribes. Framed by the car-windows are views of sudden square-topped buttes; hot alkaline wastes above which cool-seeming mirages quiver and dissolve; distant jagged peaks; dry earth riddled by torrential downpours in the brief rainy season and little stone fortesses, the dwelling places of isolated telegraph operators and railroad employes. There is no inkling, however, of Ethiopia's thrilling beauty, of the unexplored forests, of slopes luxuriantly covered with wild coffee, and placid mountain valleys where lakes like bowls of quicksilver are encircled by jade-green meadows where cattle graze and wild ducks nest undisturbed.

An occasional special train makes the run of 500 miles direct, but the average journey, requiring three whole days and two nights, is comparable to an obstacle race. Food is carried, or meals are eaten leisurely at wayside inns set in the desert and maintained by Greek immigrants. At nightfall passengers are forced to seek lodgings in towns. For this last discomfort there are two reasons: the roadbed is in poor condition and therefore minor accidents are not uncommon; also the nomad Somalis, a fiery lot, never wholly reconciled to having the waste lands which they occupy pierced by modern transportation, occasionally express ill-humor by a well-aimed arrow, a spasm of banditry, or ripping up a rail.

BEDLAM greets arrivals in Adis Ababa—greater bedlam even than in Dire Dawa on the border as there are not yet enough trained men to staff the customs. Therefore, Amharic youths, inexperienced and temperamental, are employed as inspectors. Yelping, shrieking, casting about with walking sticks as if deranged, these lads create incredible confusion, which is communicated to the passengers. The general ferment is intolerable. Meeker arrivals are overwhelmed. The antics of the inspectors are motivated apparently by whimsy, by prejudice, and, in our own case, by overweening curiosity, for though we had not one dutiable article we were compelled to empty out and expose to a large and interested public the entire contents of our luggage.

Despite its population of 50,000, Adis Ababa, with its motor cars, its few modern buildings such as the new government postoffice, built by Greek masons, is scarcely more than a gigantic primitive village of mud and thatch, of mud and corrugated iron. It is also a gigantic primitive market filled with Galla traders—Ethiopia has no cities—where barter survives and the commonest substitute for currency is salt pressed into bars. Here the foreign legations and consulates, rapidly increasing in importance and number, are located. Here is the seat of the Ethiopian Government. Across two barren hilltops, one of which is covered by a hodge-podge of semi-modern buildings which serve as the imperial palaces and which achieve, because of their large-scale construction, a certain rakish dignity, sprawls the capital, encircled by a eucalyptus forest planted by the Emperor Menelik.

Since 1917, when Emperor Lij Yasu—still alive—was deposed for seeking a secret alliance ruinous to Ethiopian neutrality, and the simple house-wifely Empress Judith was made Empress, Tafari Makonnen—then appointed Prince Regent—has wisely kept himself accessible to foreigners. Plied with intelligent questions, many of them have come away having given far more than they ever got. But thus has Tafari Makonnen vicariously enlarged his knowledge of the world. It was not until 1922 that he made his one brief tour of Europe—still asking questions. It is likely, however, that he will be more chary now of time-wasting audiences.

While his duties as Prince Regent were onerous, his duties as Emperor are overwhelming, since they combine those of a modern ruler, a minister of foreign affairs and a native chieftain. The lowliest subject in the wide land, suffering from an injustice, is entitled to the Emperor's attention. If he is prevented by the interference of provincial officials from presenting his affairs at the public tribunal where the Emperor, aided by a jury of patriarchs, sits in judgment, he may, as the Emperor passes in the street, intercept him, cry out his name, begging for justice. The Emperor is obliged to halt his entourage and attend to the suppliant. And if a wronged man or woman fails either to reach the tribunal or gain the Emperor's ear there is in the churchyard a great bell which only a sufferer may toll, calling upon the Emperor for help, awakening the capital to the knowledge that an Ethiopian subject suffers.

A SMALL man is Tafari Makonnen. But his deficiency of stature is disguised by the long velvet cape trimmed with gold, which he wears and which also conceals his womanish fragility. Or perhaps it is inept to call this apparent fragility "womanish" since among Amharics excessive advoirdupois on the part of their women, rendering them monstrously helpless, but serving as a public testimonial of good-eating and patrician indolence, is admired. The most elegant women are accompanied by men-servants who feed them, a rather disconcerting spectacle to observe, I can testify, when the meal is foreign and the food Italian macaroni.

Emperor Tafari Makonnen is black. It must not be hastily ascause of his breezy manner and good intentions. The English people are very tolerant toward their political leaders and do not rake up rash promises to throw at their heads when those have been falsified.

LABOR'S YEAR IN BRITAIN

Mr. Thomas is secretly an imperialist of the old school. He does not believe in "monkeying about" with countries like Egypt and India. He is no ascetic and enjoys a good dinner in good company, when he tells racy stories to people of eminence who seem to enjoy them. But so far he has failed to produce a cure for unemployment, and the Labor Government, like its predecessors, finds that to increase the dole and enlarge the benefits of poor relief at the expense of those who have earned good money is an easier way of government than to make the whole nation more prosperous by developing new industries and providing good wages for productive work.

That is, I think, the gravest criticism against the Labor Government—this faith in robbing prosperous, hard-working Peter to pay an unemployed Paul—and it is a policy which may lead to an economic crisis in Britain unless checked in time, but in my judgment the Conservative party has no right of criticism, because Mr. Baldwin and his colleagues played the same game and failed to produce or encourage any scheme on a big and bold scale with any far-seeing vision for reducing unemployment and poor relief. All parties are afraid of tackling this problem of the dole from the right end, which surely is that of getting men to work by government assistance to agriculture and industry, overburdened by rates and taxes.

In minor affairs the Labor Government is doing well and showing some originality. Mr. Lansbury has introduced "mixed bathing" in Hyde Park—a thing which would have raised the wigs of London fashion in days gone by and he has provided more amusing playgrounds for London children. Mr. MacDonald himself has supported a growing movement for the preservation of England's beauty spots, gravely threatened by unorganized and unsightly building.

Mr. Shaw, the Minister of War, should really be called the Minister of Peace, because he is an ardent pacifist and has pleased his own crowd and deeply annoyed others by refusing official support to school cadet corps charged with inculcating military ideas in the young mind, when the truth is, in my belief, that they set up the physique of young boys who have a natural objection to drill and parades.

Lately there has been something like a secret compact or a political deal betwen the Labor party and Mr. Lloyd George's group of Liberal followers. If that is continued the Labor Government cannot be defeated by Conservative votes, even if Mr. Maxton and his radical rebels fail to support their chief. Labor will enjoy a long term of office, only endangered now by some accidental affair at home or abroad which they may handle badly by antagonizing the British public and leading to a combination against them between Conservatives and Liberals. That may come from the direction of India or Egypt. A surrender to panic in either of those countries would destroy the Labor Government. If the gravity of affairs in India increases so that strong measures have to be taken to restore order, it is possible that Mr. MacDonald's followers may—as pacifists and self-determinationists—force him to refuse military aid on a big scale.

It is to be hoped that Mr. MacDonald will not be faced by a storm cloud from that quarter or from any other. Home affairs and European peace problems will give him enough to do, and he has proved by the record of his present administration that he has many fine qualities of character and sympathy which enable him to handle these questions with credit to his country.

STRAUSS SEES OPERA AS ALIVE

I ran him to earth in a Vienna coffeehouse and asked him to say it. He was quite as decisive as Strauss.

"How can there be any question," he asked, "of the future of opera? Why, for instance, should composers ever desert the opera form? Opera grants to the composer unbounded possibilities of expression and gives him proved aids to success—soloists, choruses, staging and lighting. Any composer with theatrical talent will always turn to the opera stage for expression.

"And the public? A crisis of the opera public simply doesn't exist. If the appearance of one exists, we must lay the blame on mediocre productions, insufficient variety in programs and the casting of singers who have outlived their best. It is well known that no medieval dragon ever guarded his treasure more closely than a singer his rôle, even though he may feel inwardly that it has grown away from him. New singers, more varied répertoire, careful production in which director, singers and orchestra shall approach their tasks as though they were sacred—and there will be no more talk of opera crises.

THERE are operas enough for any répertoire. Young composers should have a chance—time will show whether their work has enduring qualities.

"You ask me what I think of film opera. I do not share the skepticism of many musicians, or their fear of the 'mechanization' of opera through the film. Can you find on the stage less 'mechanized' comedians than Chaplin or Buster Keaton? I believe many operas would be even improved by filming. For instance, at dramatic moments in the action, instead of seeing merely an open mouth and a white blur of face as one does now, one would be able to follow every change of expression on the singer's face by means of 'close-ups.' Filmed opera would also make standard performances possible. The best singers could be brought together from all parts of the world, and with the best director, the best orchestra, the most elaborate staging, much patience and the expenditure of time and money, a performance could be achieved that would make the composer of the opera weep tears of joy."

"Do you as a modern musician eschew melody altogether and can we expect to see it disappear if the modernist movement has its way?" I asked.

Alban Berg laughed. "Melody is a comprehensive conception," he replied. "German opera, in contrast to Italian, was never melodious in the ordinary sense of the word. It has never spoiled its admirers with much melody. Melody, as I conceive it, falls rather strangely on the ear—I admit it. However, even if not immediately recognized, it is still melodious. Chinese is a language in which wonderful lyrical poems have been written. But if we don't know Chinese, or know it very little, these poems sound incomprehensible—even laughable."

Berg agrees with Strauss that opera is not dying. Musical Vienna agrees with both of them. Fashions in music, they say, will come and go. This or that opera may become obsolete. But the human heart is still moved by the story of Orpheus's descent into the shades to find the lost Eurydice, as set forth in music by Glück almost 200 years ago.

Announcing the addition of
ANOTHER
NEW COURSE
to the Institute's Training for Business Men

FIVE months ago the Institute announced a new series of Executive Training Courses.

Now an additional new Course—in Production Management—is ready.

This means that Institute training of the very latest type is available to fit your own personal needs, no matter what major department of business you are in—Production, Marketing, Finance, or General Executive Work.

In years, no Institute announcement has caused as much comment as the announcement of these new Courses.

Why?

Simply because the need for this new type of training is so great. Simply because industry is at this moment in such desperate need of men who can organize and conduct the affairs of an entire business or of an important department.

What would a merger do to your job!

Old jobs, old functions, old activities are being remorselessly altered or cast aside. On all sides, companies are merging and old employees are being dropped off. On all sides new inventions are putting old methods of manufacture into the discard. Small companies are being put to a new and challenging test by the competition of large companies.

Whether you are in a small company or a great corporation, everywhere you hear warnings to look out for your job, to prepare for a new form of competition.

Is there any security for the individual in an era such as this?

Yes. Mergers and reorganizations are merely deep breaths in healthy growth. Their basis is economy. Their promise is greater chance for the individual. For every job wiped out, there is a bigger opportunity in a more profitable field.

There is an abundance of these jobs. But there is a shortage of men to handle them. A well-known New York banker said recently: "In the near future, America is facing a shortage of 125,000 properly trained executives."

For men trained in management the rewards are immediate. That is why the Institute's new courses are management courses.

Prominent Contributors

In preparing the new Courses, the Institute went to the outstanding business leaders of the country and asked for their aid and cooperation. Among the many men who have gladly contributed are: JOSEPH P. DAY, President, Joseph P. Day, Inc., Real Estate; Hon. WILL H. HAYS, President, Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., formerly U. S. Postmaster General; BRUCE BARTON, Chairman of the Board, Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborn, Inc.; JOHN T. MADDEN, Dean, School of Commerce, Accounts and Finance, New York University; DR. JULIUS KLEIN, The Assistant Secretary, U. S. Department of Commerce; GEORGE BALDWIN, Vice-President, General Electric Company; HUBERT T. PARSON, President, F. W. Woolworth Company; DAVID SARNOFF, President, Radio Corporation of America; DEXTER S. KIMBALL, Dean, The College of Engineering, Cornell University.

Send for the Facts

What this new training can mean to your business progress is explained in a newly published booklet, "What an Executive Should Know."

This booklet is free. But it will not interest those who are merely curious. It is offered only to mature men who are seriously interested in their own business progress. To prevent it from falling into the hands of those for whom it has no message, we ask you merely to fill in the spaces in the coupon below. Mail the coupon today.

Adis Ababa, the Capital, Is Chiefly a Gigantic Primitive Market.

sumed, however, that he looks like a Negro. On the contrary his features are conspicuously Semitic. His high-bridged nose is thin and long. His luxuriant hair, though curly, is not inclined to wooliness. His eyes, more brown than black, have a marked amber glint. And he is heavily bearded. In these respects he is considered typical of the Amharic aristocracy, the self-constituted ruling class which guess-work puts at 3,000,000.

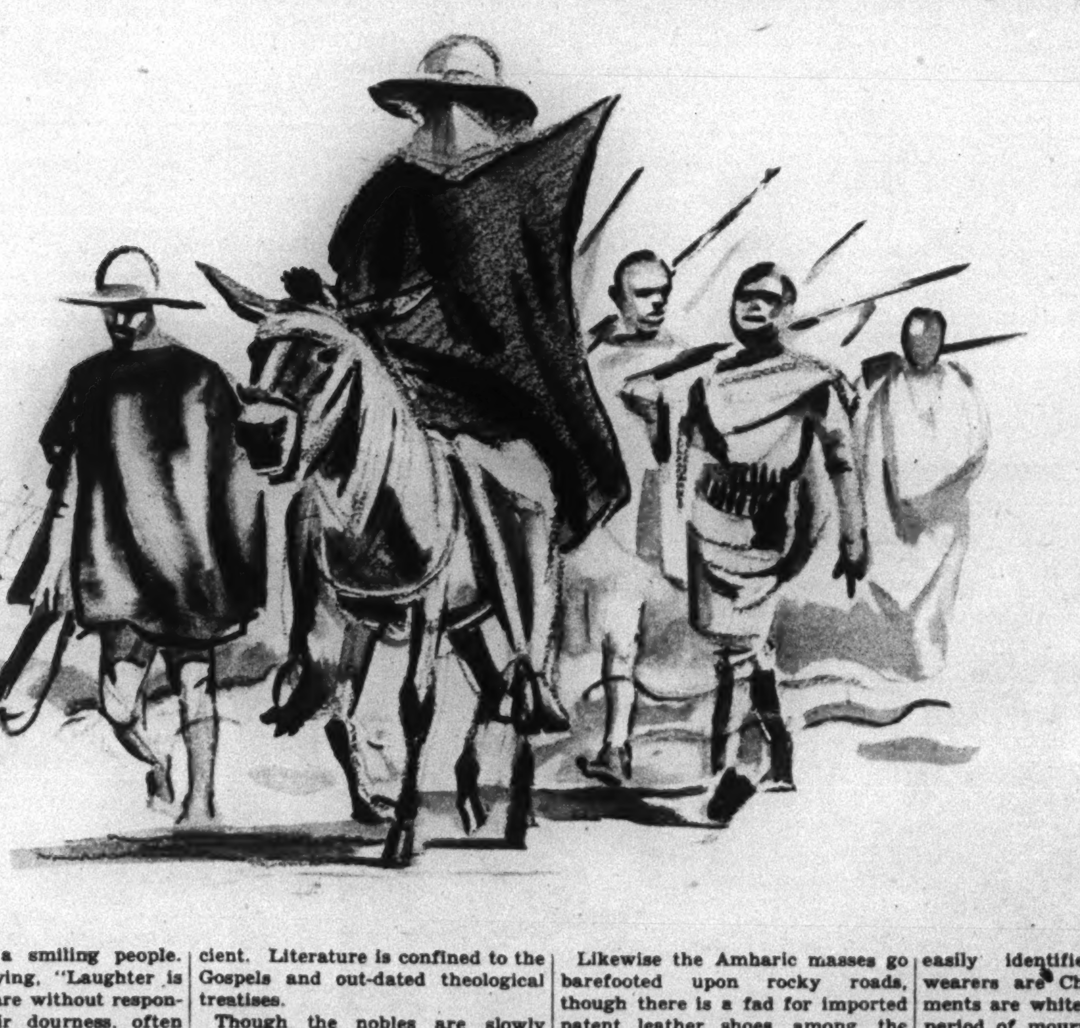
TRIGGER-QUICK Amharics are to deny kinship with the Negro races, whom they have, in the past, relentlessly conquered and enslaved. In this denial the Amharics are to some extent upheld by many anthropologists, who see in these folk the hybrid survivors of an ancient, non-African race, classified as Hamitic—a once highly civilized race, for it possesses a written language of thirty-three characters. In support of this racial antiquity Amharics assert that their first Emperor was a son born to the Queen of Sheba and King Solomon. Proofs of this claim, however, are to be found only in records composed by Coptic priests since Ethiopia's Christianization in the year 400 and set down in Geze, a language so completely dead that few priests, with whom the country swarms—their number is estimated to be 30,000—are able to translate their litanies.

A phenomenally wide range of color, varying from olive to black, is found among Amharics. Many upper-class women whose oriental beauty of face is often startling, and who avoid exposure to the sun, wearing wide Italian felt hats and muslin veils, are very light, a charming "café au lait" or sun-tan. But, for the most part, Amharics are a black folk. The King's blackness has a curious bluish cast which, I am inclined to believe, accounts for his fairness in photographs, although it is generally believed among whites in Adis Ababa that before circulation his portraits are expertly "doctored" by an Armenian court photographer.

The Emperor is a grave man. He is by birth an Amharic, and Amharics are not a smiling people. They have a saying, "Laughter is for slaves, who are without responsibilities." Their dourness, often mistaken for hostility, is the inevitable product of harsh living in a harsh land. Preoccupied, in the past with repulsing slave-raiding Moslems; with maintaining their integrity as a race of Christians; with conquering weaker peoples and with repulsing the sly encroachments of white nations, they have not cultivated gracious modes of existence. Experiencing no consistent contacts with civilization higher than their own they have stagnated, become arrogantly self-satisfied and averse, therefore, to change. Illiteracy, extending even to the priests, the authorized school teachers, abounds. Only the most aristocratic can read and write, and among these, few, except leisured noblewomen, are really proficient. Literature is confined to the Gospels and out-dated theological treatises.

Though the nobles are slowly adopting European comforts, the living standards of the Amharics are generally as low as those of West Coast Africans in the tropics. Absolved from hand labor by serfs and slaves, drawn from race groups more retarded than themselves, they have created nothing, apparently, for centuries; wrought nothing from the raw materials at hand with which to mitigate the harshness of living. Consequently, the paucity of craftsmanship is deplorable. For instance, accounting themselves to be excellent riders and living in a land which exports some of the finest hides in the world, they continue to use crude wooden saddles, made according to one standardized design, which gall their beasts horribly.



An Amharic Nobleman Accompanied by His Private Army.

The Illustrations on These Two Pages Are by Cyrus LeRoy Baldridge.

Likewise the Amharic masses go barefooted upon rocky roads, though there is a fad for imported patent leather shoes among the noblemen who never walk. However, shoe and sandal making, fostered by Armenian immigrants, is beginning to flourish. In a country where wool-bearing sheep can thrive and where there are enough of an inferior breed to furnish material for hand-woven bournouses worn by the rich, the Amharics are without blankets with which to wrap themselves on chilly nights, and they continue to wear cotton, usually imported and of a sleazy quality—except those of the highest rank, who wear silk—and which is obviously a poor protection from the rains or the piercing cold of the high altitudes which they inhabit.

By their standardized costume and by their guns Amharics are easily identified. Because the wearers are Christians their garments are white—except during the period of mourning, when blue is worn—and also modestly all-enveloping. The trousers are long and tight below the knees, the smocks, beneath a mantle, close-fitting and long-sleeved. Similar to that of the men the women's attire is augmented by an over dress. Hereditary caste differences are indicated by subtle variations of the mantle's drapery or bands of color upon its hem. Only people of high degree are entitled to hats, and formerly only these might carry the woven straw parasols, now used by people of all degrees and any race.

Wherever Amharics are there are guns, a fact impressed upon the traveler by random shots fired from the moving train, or competitions in markmanship conducted during the long waits at wayside stations. Theoretically only Amharics and their hired soldiers are permitted arms. Theoretically, guns and ammunition, beyond the government's needs, are contraband. The country teems, however, with up-to-date evidence of gun running. The humblest Amharic man aspires to at least one gun and cartridge belt. The more prosperous are attended by one or several gun bearers. Women as well as men of consequence command private armies.

IN Adis Ababa, where no proud Amharic who can afford a riding-animal of any sort appears on foot—the best mounts are sure-footed mules, more costly than horses—an unarmed pedestrian, white or black, is at a disadvantage and promptly steps aside for the armed man who takes precedence as his prerogative, but who gives way hastily before a mounted and armed fellow countryman or one accompanied by gunbearers.

Since they form the ruling class it is these sluggish Amharics who are the Amharic Emperor's chief concern. It is they whom he, throughout the past fourteen years, has sought to awaken. Despite the frustrations provided during his regency by the late Empress Judith, who was fanatically conservative, he has contrived to initiate a series of radical reforms. He has for instance, forbidden slavery. That this law will become effective at once is improbable, for white colonials with highly organized governmental machinery are encountering endless difficulties in obliterating this ancient African institution. Nevertheless, the imperial slaves and those of many noble houses have been freed. Plainly he has revealed a determination to reorganize the decadent Ethiopian church by severing its ties with Alexandria and by holding the parasitical priests accountable for the existence of illiteracy.

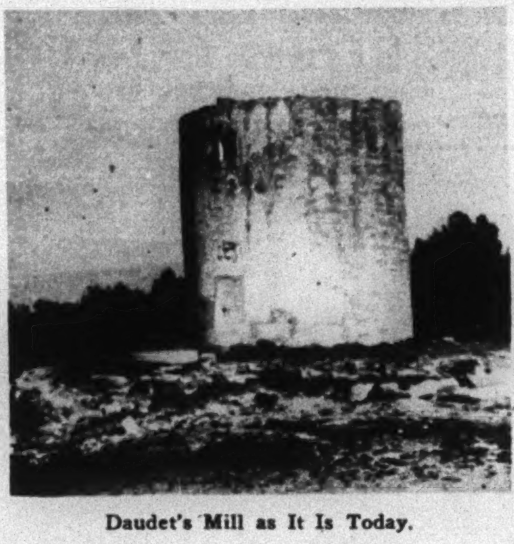
THE OLD MILL THAT WAS DAUDET'S LOOKOUT

From Its Friendly Tower, Now in Danger of Ruin, He Saw His Own Provence and Defended It Against Centralization From North

By HAROLD CALLENDER

ONE of the most famous of windmills, the old mill in Provence which was the scene of the "Lettres de Mon Moulin," Alphonse Daudet's earliest and best-known work, is falling into ruins, and French friends and admirers of Daudet are seeking to create a fund to restore and preserve it. Some have urged that it be officially "classified"—that is, added to the list of buildings of artistic and historic interest which the State, through the Ministry of Fine Arts, has taken under its protection.

What is left of "Daudet's mill," as it is called, stands upon a slight elevation not far south of Arles, in the region known as the Camargue, a wind-swept plain near the mouth of the Rhône. Even in the 1860s, when the youthful Daudet utilized it as a sort of conning tower from which to observe the life of Provence, the mill had reached an advanced age and had succumbed to the competition of steam-driven rivals.



Daudet's Mill as It Is Today.

Photograph From Times Wide World.

Not for decades have its "wings," as the French call them, stretched out to receive the "mistral"—the wind that comes down the Rhône Valley—or turned to grind wheat. The "wings" have disappeared as completely as though Don Quixote had severed them with his lance. The "capuchon," too, is gone, the doorway is sealed up and the gusts of the mistral beat against only a cylindrical form built of stone, a relic of the days when the mistral was Provence's only source of mechanical power.

Though standing in a remote and rarely visited corner of Provence, Daudet's mill has enjoyed for many years a peculiar renown. For this "philosopher of the countryside," as Daudet used to call it, has become a literary character, a personification of Provence. As such it is almost as well known in England and America as it is in France.

In the English-speaking countries, as well as in France, the "Lettres" long have been one of the first books to be read by classes in French. Thousands of American students have struggled laboriously through this small volume, line by line. In it they found the sunshine, the gayety, the farandole, the folklore, the rich imagination, the life and color of Provence. All this centred about the old mill, from which Daudet looked upon the scene. M. Séguin's goat, the Pope's mule, Père Gaucher and the Curé of Cucugnan were living figures which seemed to emerge from its stone doorway to frisk about upon the sunny plain at the foot of the purple Alps and to bring back the Provence of the Middle Ages, when a papal palace was built upon the banks of the Rhône and Avignon was a rival of Rome.

Near the village of Fontville, which gets its share of the sandy dust hurled down upon Provence by the mistral, there rises from the plain a series of tiny hills surmounted by the remains of windmills. There are four of these old mills in a row, and the first is Daudet's. It is the one nearest the Château de Montauban, which stands just above Fontvielle.

When Daudet was in his twenties the château was occupied by his uncle and is now the property of Jean Ravennes, the writer. Carved upon the façade of the house one reads the words: "Blessed house! How many times have I come here to draw strength from nature and to recover from the feverish life of Paris!" The sentence is a quotation from Daudet's "Trente Ans de Paris," and alludes to this château, where he spent many pleasant and stimulating hours.

What interested Daudet even more than this somewhat luxurious château was the near-by "mas," as it is called in Provence—a big, rambling farmhouse typical of the south of France, its stone walls covered with vines, its courtyard paved with flagstones. There is an old well covered with stone at the back door. Peacocks and goats wander near by. In front of one of its doors, partly shaded by trees, there still stands the stone table on which Daudet wrote much of his first book. Daudet was fond of sitting in the vaulted kitchen of the farmhouse, before a fire of enormous logs, and listening to the talk of the peasants, which embraced both contemporary gossip and the legendary stories of Provence.

Looking through the pines and cypresses from the window of his room in the château, Daudet had before him the old mill, even then in a somewhat decrepit state, which he was to associate with his Provençal tales. Here Daudet went daily to soothe his nerves, to forget that northern city, Paris, so alien to a Provençal, to immerse himself in his own countryside and its beauties.

Here he would dream away whole days, warmed by the Mediterranean sun, entertained by the birds and the grasshoppers, captivated by the scene that lay before him. The legends and the "true stories" he heard from the peasants mingled with the products of his own imagination and doubtless also with tales he had heard in his youth in the south. And because they took shape in his mind as he lay beside the old mill, with the Camargue on one side and the faintly purple foothills of the Alps on the other, he called them "Letters From My Mill."

THE contents of these sketches and tales are of the slightest. They have little substance or sequence, some of them being simply descriptions of daily events in the life of the country, some merely impressionistic pictures. Their distinction lies principally in the manner of their composition, in the poetic and sometimes wistful quality that permeates them, in the way in which they reflect the sunlight and bright colors of the Provençal scene.

From some of his later works—for example, "Froment Jeune et Risler Ainé"—Daudet has been compared to Dickens. But in the "Lettres" and "Le Petit Chose" he makes one think rather of Barrie—of a very French and southern Barrie, of a Barrie born in sunny Roman Nîmes instead of under the cloudy skies of northern Thrums.

For Daudet was, above all, a southerner, a Mediterranean, and it was one of his aims, as he himself said, to interpret the "Méridional" to the northerner. Daudet was constantly preoccupied with the southerner—often a figure of caricature in the north of France—whose strength and weakness he knew only too well. He would seek in his own traits and habits of thought that which was "different" and Provençal rather than northern.

"The question does not concern France alone," he remarked. "Each country has its north and its south, two poles between which character and temperament oscillate." In his "Quinze Ans de Mariage" north and south clash in the persons of husband and wife. This, for him, was symbolic; for he considered that the life of France had been largely determined by the struggle between the opposing characters and traditions of the south and the north. The southerner, he found, was subject to excesses and imagination, but his fantasy remained lucid even when he was carried away by it: "Among us you never find that mixture of relations and figures characteristic of Carlyle, Browning and Poe."

Shall Provence, with its customs, traditions and even a language which are as old as France, if not older, eventually be subjugated by northern influences? Is it really necessary that a highly centralized State destroy a local language and culture which are among the oldest in Europe merely because such was the policy inherited from the revolutionaries?

These issues, manifestations of what Daudet regarded as the eternal conflict between south and north, have been revived in France in the last few years by what is known as the movement for regionalism. Its sponsors contend that to crush out the ancient cultures and tongues, French and non-French, which remain in France would be an irreparable loss to the nation. Daudet was one of the pioneers in the regionalist movement. He early realized the danger of the "antagonism between Paris and the provinces" and the need of "giving a bit of air and life to the limbs which the head is weakening and ruining."

If you go to one of the frequent and very gay fêtes in Provence today you will hear scarcely a word of French. Yet, although books and a few newspapers are still published in Provençal, it is undoubtedly a declining tongue. With it will go, probably much of the ancient culture distinctive of Provence. Since Europe becomes every year more highly industrialized and the peasants' sons move to the cities, it seems likely that the ancient culture of Provence eventually will suffer the fate of Daudet's old mill, which was one of the first victims of the machine age.

ROOFS OF MEXICO CITY IN CONSTANT USE.

THE roofs in Mexico City are used constantly. Stairs leading to them are on the outside of the houses and every one living around the two or three patios which make up the usual apartment house climbs up and down from the roof many times a day. Clothes are spread on the stones of the roof to dry and, when dry, more water is sprinkled on them so that they will continue to bleach in the sun.

In Spring, when there is no wind, housewives dump out their lamb's wool mattresses on the roofs, and beat them until they are free from dust and once more light and fluffy. The ticking is washed and a man comes to restuff and sew up the mattress.

SEVILLE: CRADLE OF GREAT ADVENTURES

Port of Columbus and Spanish Galleons, It May Become The Great Transatlantic Airport for All of Europe

By MILDRED ADAMS

WHEN the Graf Zeppelin cast loose from her mooring mast at Seville and set her course for South America the bones of Columbus and Cortez, Pizarro and Coronado must have stirred in their graves. And if, among the crowd that came to see her off, there were certain sturdy figures in leather jackets and plate armor it would have been no wonder. For the silvery ship was to follow in the air the path which the Conquistadores and their hordes marked out on the sea 400 years ago.

Seville was then the port from which all expeditions sailed to the Americas. Then she bade farewell to gayly painted, high-sided galleons, decorated with gold leaf and intricate carving and dedicated to the glory of Spain and the honor of God. The actual journey would take two months, but it might be a year before the galleons, loaded deep with treasure, would sail again up the Guadalquivir and warp their way into Seville's wharves. Now that same city waves excited good-by to a strange vessel larger by far than the greatest of the galleons, yet able to sail in the air, a ship that can reach the distant coast of South America in three days.

If the plans of the Spanish Government, the Compañia Transaerea Colon, the makers of Zeppelins, and certain far-sighted men in Buenos Aires work out, Seville will be the transatlantic airport for Europe, just as four centuries ago she was the transatlantic galleon port, caravel port, port for all argosies that came and went on lawful business between Europe and the overseas possessions of his Most Worshipful Majesty, the King of Spain.

The reasons for her supremacy at that time were partly geographic, and partly a matter of whatever forces made Spain the rising nation of Europe, and the only one possessed of monarchs willing to finance Columbus's expedition and so gain title to a new continent. The political and economic power has passed to other countries, but Seville's geographic position is unchanged. It is that which is attracting the attention of foreign capital, which brings promoters from Germany and airport builders from New York, which makes it possible that she may gain in the air the proud position she once held on the sea.

Seville lies down in the southwest corner of the square Spanish peninsula, the nearest great European city to South America. A flat town set in a flat plain, she is surrounded by an atmosphere happily free from adverse air currents. Most of the year she is a sunny city, and almost never does she suffer from the drifting blankets of fog which upset time schedules and endanger lives. The Guadalquivir, that placid stream which looked to the Zeppelin's passengers in the early dawn like a river of blood, made her a seaport for Phoenician and Roman, Goth and Moslem and Christian adventurer. Its slow current and broad surface make it an equally good mooring base for modern seaplanes.

THE city has already given proof of her excellencies as a port of departure. In March of last year two officers in the Spanish Army took a plane named after the most popular image in Seville, Jesus del Gran Poder, from her airdrome to a safe landing in Bahia, Brazil. Nine months later another plane left the same place to break the long-distance record, and though it failed of its goal it, too, landed safely in Brazil. Now the Graf Zeppelin reports that the southern route from Seville to South America is far easier than the northern one to New York. It looks as though the old trade-wind track of the galleons were once more to be filled with marvelous ships that sail, only this time they will sail in the air.

Seville's fame as a jumping-off place for America started with that continent's discovery. Christopher Columbus, an obscure navigator, obtained a promise from their Catholic Majesties that they would see him in Seville and listen to his mad plan for reaching the Eastern Indies by sailing west. They even wrote ahead directing that board and lodging be furnished him, but they neglected to take into consideration the fact that the city did not yet belong to them, and in the excitement of taking it away from its Moslem rulers they forgot all about Columbus.

He stayed there for a time, and during the years he seems to have made it a centre for various operations. The master of an ancient inn, La Casa de Abades, will proudly point to certain rooms and certain corners of tiled patios as the veritable places where Columbus met his friends and perfected his plans. When he finally obtained the support of Isabella and Ferdinand it came in the form of two caravels, their crews and their provisions, exacted as a fine for disobedience, from the little town of Palos, sixty miles away.

Although he did not actually set sail from Seville, it was to that brilliant city that he came on his return to hold his first procession of triumph. On Palm Sunday of 1493 he marched through its narrow streets with his train of Indians, his chattering parrots, his strange woods and plants, his gifts of feathers and beadwork, all of them making their first appearance on the Continent of Europe, all meant to prove to a doubting world that his great idea had become a fact, or, in the more cautious words of Peter Martyr, that "pursuing the sun west from Gades, 5,000 miles of each a thousand paces, as he relates, he fell in with sundry islands, and took possession of one of them, of greater circuit, he asserts, than the whole of Spain."

HOW the city must have seethed only they can guess who have seen that most volatile of towns cast aside its work-day demureness and throw itself into a fiesta. It was the beginning of the Golden Age, a period when treasure poured into Seville as it had never before poured into any city in the world.

Their Catholic Majesties appointed it the official port for the departure and arrival of all ships going to the new lands. At first, that meant explorers, soldiers, priests, that the new land might feel the power of Spain and its savage inhabitants be convinced of the will of God. As Cortez, Pizarro, Coro-

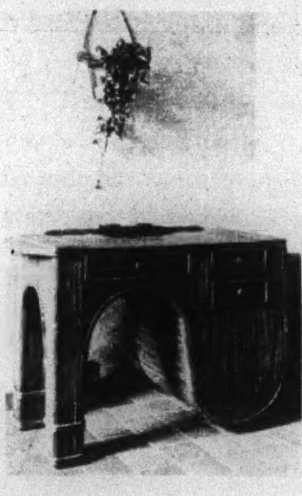
Contrasting with the naturalness of Mr. French's work, a modern desk designed by Warren Wheelock is displayed among other sophisticated forms of outdoor furniture which the smart country house is installing. Here art has triumphed over the medium, molding the wicker into a convenient form on wheels, so that it may be moved indoors when necessary or around the terrace. The wicker is in a walnut brown hue and is waterproofed so as to withstand occasional showers. While comparatively light in weight, it contains three drawers. Its utility suggests the trend of terrace furniture in some types to take on the attributes and uses of indoor furniture.



A Modern Desk on Wheels.

Designed by Warren Wheelock.

Painted furniture in charming and authentic designs has until recently been generally available only to those fortunate persons who were the lucky owners of eighteenth century pieces designed by Angelica Kauffmann and her contemporaries in England and France. Now, however, manufacturers are making fine reproductions with much of the delicate charm of their prototypes. Although especially appropriate for bedrooms, these ornamented satinwood commodes, chairs, settees and desks have found a place in many other rooms of the home.

There were very few of these decorated pieces made in this country in Colonial times, for we did not then possess artists trained in this particular painter's craft. The examples that have come down to us were imported from England or France. Both Sheraton and Heppelwhite produced many examples at the same time they were making their more widely known mahogany pieces. The French styles, although they were, of course, closely related to the English—in fact; the Paris fashions influenced the London designers to a considerable degree—are not so well known.

THE French cabinetmakers displayed a greater variety of forms and ornamentation than did their English confrères, who were close followers of the fashion set by Robert Adam and his brother. This style adhered closely to a definite type, more or less architectural. The actual ornamentation was confined to a much smaller number of artists in England than in France. For the best work of the English was executed by the well known Angelica Kauffmann, by Cipriani and a few others.

In France at the same period and even earlier, painted furniture had a much richer traditional background, including such masters as Martin, whose lacquer gave the name to the particular style of painted furniture that we know as Vernis Martin. The work of the finest painters of the eighteenth century, such as Watteau, Boucher and Fragonard, inspired the design for the ornamental decoration—flowers, ribbons, urns, and arabesques—and the pictorial embellishments which in plaques and panels enriched the commodes and other pieces. It is in the French style of decorations painted on satinwood that considerable interest is now being shown.

Decorated furniture may often achieve a closer harmony with a room's furnishings than some other forms, because the colors employed in the fabrics and wall hangings may be repeated in the ornamentation of the furniture. Often the pieces are selected in the unpainted satinwood and the painted ornamentation done to order so as to get just the right effect.

"The amount of decoration as well as the quality," says Henry W. Lloyd, who has for years been designing and making this type of furniture, "is very important, for while beautiful results may be obtained by generous ornamentation on a piece, the relation of the piece to the interior should always be considered. One must remember that the character of this painted furniture during the best period was one of restrained ornamentation, with a careful balance between the painted design and the satinwood background. No wood is better suited for this delicate painting than satinwood, because the brown color is so soft, and the grain, while it is varied, is not obtrusive."

For bedrooms and dressing rooms painted furniture is of course especially adapted because of the delicate effects possible. Chaise longues, easy chairs and beds modeled on the graceful Spanish or Venetian examples where headboard and carved posts at the foot take the painted ornamentation in a natural way, are interesting bedroom pieces. Tall dressers equipped for holding clothing for men are also obtainable in this painted style.

Some types of painted furniture of this era had a solidly painted background, generally in some soft neutral pastel hue or gray or tan or dull green. A beautiful poudreuse with a warm gray ground and a plaque showing a seated Grecian figure on the top, illustrated this style. Kidney-shaped dressing tables are characteristic forms of furniture of the eighteenth century and, as Mr. Lloyd pointed out, they are now very useful pieces for our compact rooms. They may be placed in front of a window or crosswise in a corner, and, not being very wide, they take up little wall space.

The commode is now, as it was in the eighteenth century, one of the most interesting pieces of painted furniture. Following the style of Louis XVI, in whose time the fashion was introduced of painting the design directly across the front regardless of the lines of the drawer openings—a mode followed by marquetry ornamentation—one may have a commode either simply decorated with sprays and scrolls, or a piece with elaborate pictorial plaques of considerable artistry.

Painted furniture in the eighteenth century style offers an interesting variation in a room treatment, for it is distinctly different from the walnut, mahogany or fruit wood effects of other periods. For interiors in which an atmosphere of restrained elegance is needed, it is a great mistake to use furniture which may provide a severe or merely quaint effect. Here painted furniture has the advantage of bestowing the appropriate distinction and grace.

In discussing in this department on May 18 Frederick Kiesler's recent book on modern art, which brings new and valuable points of view to the understanding of this elusive mode, reference to his volume was omitted from the caption of the picture reproduced from it. The caption, "An Architect's Office in Ultra-Modern Utilitarian Design," should have added that the illustration was taken from "Contemporary Art Applied to the Store and Its Display," by Frederick Kiesler, published by Brentano's.

OPERA IS ALIVE, SAYS RICHARD STRAUSS

The Famous Composer Ridicules the Pessimists and His Views Are Strongly Supported by Alban Berg

By JOHN MacCORMAC

VIENNA.

"I LOOK to the future of opera with complete optimism. It would survive as an art form if not a single new work were to be composed. The maintenance of a high level of presentation is the important thing."—Richard Strauss.

"Composers will never desert opera. And the public? A crisis of the opera public simply does not exist. If its appearance exists we must blame mediocre presentation, lack of variety in programs and the casting of singers who have outlived their best."—Alban Berg.

The two outstanding representatives of the established style of grand opera composition and the new had been asked for their opinions on the "decline of opera," about which much has been said recently. I had asked them if it was true that opera was falling into disfavor because the older works were played out, new composers had failed to produce enduring substitutes, good singers were growing scarce and a mechanized age preferred its opera as a domestic amenity, transmitted by electricity like refrigeration or light.

Dr. Richard Strauss, erstwhile director of the Berlin and Vienna Opera Houses, admittedly the greatest living composer and the only one to produce during the last two decades a work which has found a regular place on world programs ("Der Rosenkavalier"), was once so "modern" as to lead ex-Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany to regret that "I have nourished a snake in my bosom." He was modern enough even to direct during his American tour of 1904 two great concerts in Wanamaker's New York store, an enterprise which equally failed to commend itself to his imperial master. But a change in musical fashions was eventually to leave him far behind, as may be deduced from his answer to a young composer of the latest "atonal" school who had requested an opinion of his latest work: "My dear fellow, I believe you have quite enough talent to be able to compose in quite a different manner."

ALBAN BERG, in the opera field greatest of the trio of modernists—Berg, Stravinsky and Hindemith—is the most important if not the most extreme exponent of atonalism. He has carried it so far that to the unpracticed ear some of his work suggests nothing so much as Chinese music. When his opera, "Wozzek," was first produced in Vienna a few weeks ago the management of the State Opera, anticipating trouble, had posted fifty policemen in the house. There was no trouble, other than that experienced by Berg, the director, and the cast of the opera in responding to the curtain calls with which they were showered by a wildly enthusiastic audience. But certain newspaper critics attacked the opera viciously on the following morning on the ground that it was "Bolshevist" music. These were the newspapers of the Right, while those of Liberal or Socialist views praised "Wozzek" extravagantly. In other words, these journals viewed the opera entirely from the angle of their own political leanings—which will read strangely in America, but is at least one answer to those ultra-moderns who contend that opera is an antiquated art of no significance or interest today.

These particulars will suggest that between Richard Strauss and Alban Berg lies a world of difference. But in one respect I found them absolutely agreed, that opera is neither dead nor dying. They admit that it may be temporarily indisposed, concur as to the cause and prescribe the same remedies—better performances and the elimination of singers whose future is all behind them. It would be as wise, they thought, to maintain that opera is defunct because our day has not produced its Wagner as to say that this is an irreligious age because it has not produced a St. Peter.

Richard Strauss received me, not in the beautiful palace in the Belvedere Park presented to him by an admiring Austrian Republic, but in the white-walled room of a Vienna sanatorium where he was taking radiotherapy treatment. His déshabill and the bandages with which, for some precautionary reason, his head was enveloped, did not disconcert him, and for me served only to emphasize the vigor of this man of 66, who, like his operas, has survived the vicissitudes of years. Strauss is tall, gray-headed, with the brusque manner and alert face of the business man and organizer rather than the artist. His words come readily, but his thought is weighed. I could tempt him, for instance, into no definite expression of opinion about the enduring qualities of atonalism, though skepticism was to be inferred from his words. But when I quoted the coroner's verdict brought in by certain famous singers over the supposedly moribund body of grand opera his reply was decisive to the point of being epigrammatic.

Richard Strauss: "Good Opera, Well Produced, Will Always Draw."

Photograph by Freiherr von Gudenberg. Copyright Karl Robert Langewiesche.

"We should not ask singers to talk about the future of opera," he said, "but about their own past. To speak of the decline of opera is idle. Good opera, well produced, will always draw and, as I hear from everywhere, is drawing. Naturally the European economic crisis has strongly affected the opera public, which has always consisted predominantly of the educated middle class. And yet just as often as good operas, classical or modern, especially when newly staged, are produced, are they well attended.

"THEREFORE I cannot in the least understand this cry of the decline of opera, which the newspapers never let us hear the last of. What do people want? In the last 150 years since 1780 there have been produced, at a liberal estimate, 100 operas that are still alive today, that is, which still possess value other than as historical records or curiosities. That means that we have had two operas for every three years. And even if we consider the most flourishing period, from 1830 to 1880, which produced such exceptional genius as that of Meyerbeer, Wagner and Verdi—how small, relatively, is the number of operas from that age which have survived! Now let us consider the last epoch, from 1880 to 1930. What a wealth of talent and of masterpieces from Puccini, Mascagni and Leoncavallo, not to mention the German and other composers. And yet people talk of a decline, because a few years pass without producing an outstanding operatic success.

"I quite seriously maintain that opera would survive as an art form if not a single new work were to be composed. We have already about one hundred masterpieces, quite enough material if properly produced. To demand new masterpieces continuously is to expect too much. Genius will not allow itself to be forced into the world before its time. These master works are timeless, they are truly great and remain unaffected by the changes of taste, just as do the plays of Shakespeare and Goethe's writings or the orchestral music of Mozart, Beethoven and Haydn.

"Are there fewer good singers than there used to be? The answer is very definitely, no. Our fathers spoke of a Donna Anna, a Florestan, where we today have a score. In those days there were only six great opera houses; today there are many, all with their stars and their chorus singers."

To the question whether these days of sport, of mechanization and of speed were unfavorable to the creation and production of opera Strauss answered:

"The time is certainly not favorable, but genius never lets itself be prevented by circumstances from finding its expression. Goethe and Schiller wrote during Germany's most troublous era of political disintegration. As to sport, I am convinced that the immoderate attention which present-day youth devote to sport has an influence on opera attendance, but I do not take the situation tragically. It will pass—at least in its exaggerated form. The film, the talkie, the radio; all these are not serious rivals of opera. Radio performances even educate a new opera public. The man who hears an opera and likes it will want to see it. Not even the most perfect machine can replace the living performance, the magic of the personality of the living singers."

I asked him whether an opera in modern clothes and setting was possible and whether the contention that it was not possible did not in itself indicate that the opera as an art form had grown antiquated.

"How about my own 'Intermezzo'?" replied Strauss. "When the audience at its première in Barcelona first noticed that the singers were in modern dress they thought they had come by mistake to an undress rehearsal. However, they did not leave the theatre, but stayed and applauded. The use of costume in the opera is only custom. Mozart's operas used to be played in the costume of their own time."

WHEN I angled finally for an opinion on modern opera music, Strauss parried with the remark that a full-dress rehearsal of "Wozzek" would begin at the State Opera House in twenty minutes, that I could see it and make up my own mind. I did.

"Wozzek" is ten years old and was produced five years ago in Berlin, but this was its première in Vienna, the citadel of musical conservatism. To master its peculiar rhythms had been a work of four months even for the Vienna Opera orchestra. It tells, in fifteen short scenes, how a poor, simple-minded soldier is betrayed by his wife, murders her and drowns himself. The text, written by the short-lived German poet Buechner more than 100 years ago, is curiously modern in its starkness and lack of bravura. The music which Berg has provided would not cure a headache. It lapses only sparingly into melody, notably in a cradle song and in a humming chorus by sleeping soldiers. There is also a country dance set to a strange waltz rhythm, which has a certain harmony, but a harmony of its own.

The music rings strangely upon the ear, especially in the earlier passages, but is always undeniably expressive. It follows the action faithfully, always underlines it, sometimes foreshadows it. One strikingly effective conception is Berg's embodiment of the whole tragedy in a single pote that, starting softly from silence with the horns and gradually drawing in instrument after instrument, twice swells crescendo fortissimo to H, a madness of sound jarring to its end in a wild outcry. The wife is dead and the murderer hastens to his own end; the music says that in a language which there is no mistaking. "Wozzek" is occasionally grotesque but it is not ludicrous. It has strongly impressed Vienna, where it will become a semi-permanent feature of opera programs. Alban Berg, it is admitted, has something to say.

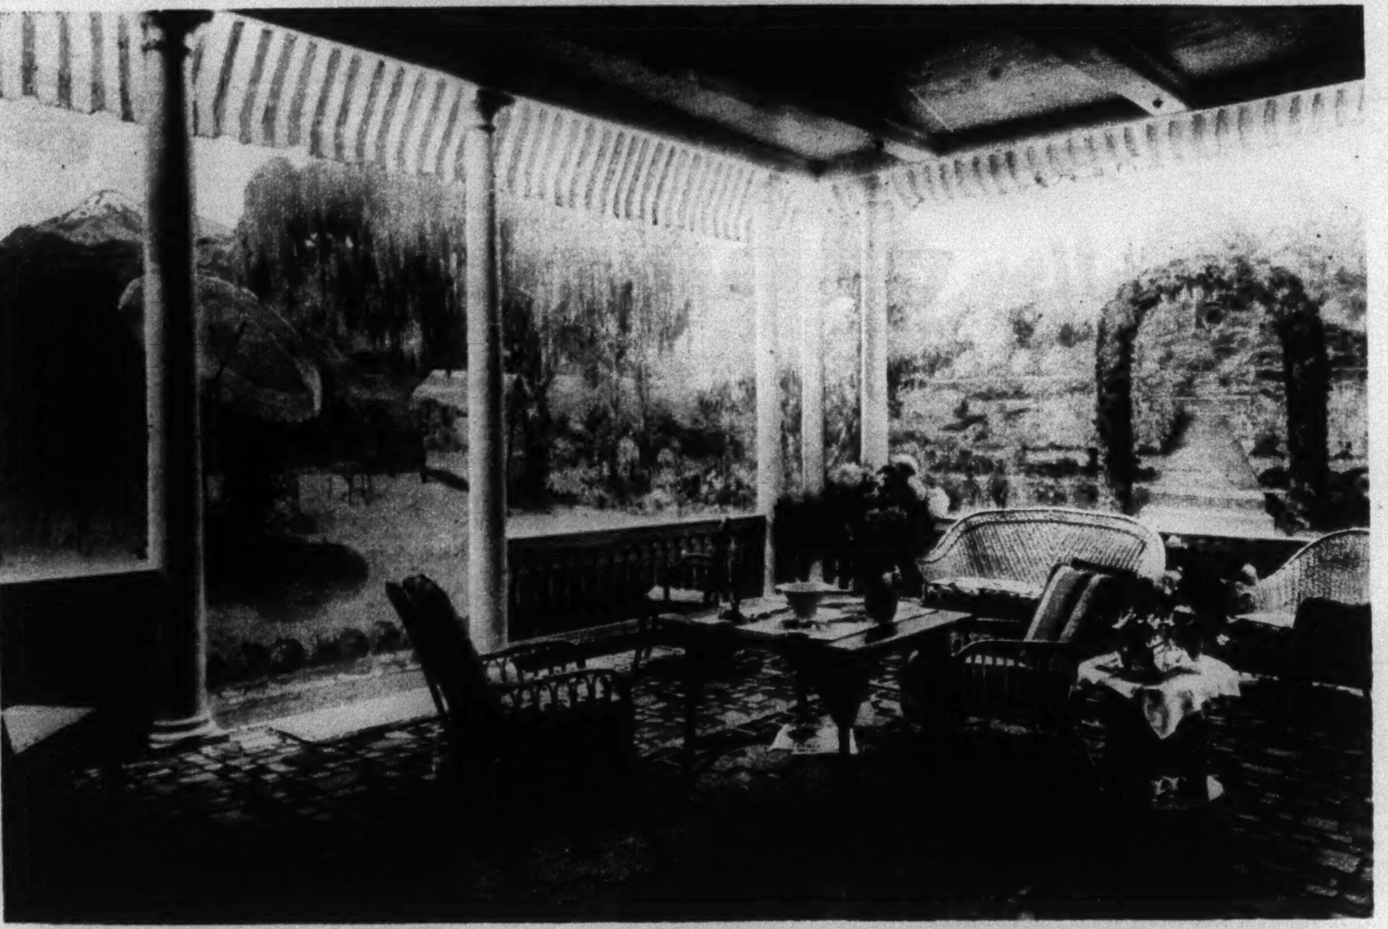
NEW GARDEN EFFECTS INSIDE THE HOUSE

Landscapes Painted on The Walls Give the Illusion of the Out-of-Doors



Not an Outside Porch, but a Room Decorated to Present a Garden Vista.

From the Design by David Paige.

By WALTER RENDELL STOREY

DEVELOPMENTS in the decoration of the walls of our rooms have, during the last season, included a number of new approaches to interior effect. The hand ornamentations introduced range from lightly painted flower forms placed here and there over a solid-hued papered or painted wall to the more elaborate landscape schemes.

Considering the interest revived in old scenic papers which present, for instance, an ideal land of romance or a view of harvesting activity, it is hardly a coincidence that a recently completed mural should be arranged in such a way that three sides of the room suggest a beautiful garden viewed from a realistic porch. Here, as in the old wall-papers, was the desire to obtain a rustic vista and to create a novel effect. In such a room so treated one may sit at ease in a wicker chair and enjoy the illusion of an opulent Summer garden even in the depth of Winter.

In some respects a room decorated in this manner in the home of Harry Brooks in Fitchburg, Mass., is an illustration of the modern architect's theorem that we may, with our mechanical ability to ventilate, heat and illuminate our interiors, do without windows. For the first step of the artist, David Paige, who has created other murals of this type, was to close up all openings on three sides of the room so as to have unbroken walls on which to place the specially prepared canvas for the painting. A low porch railing, with round corner posts and the lower edge of an awning realistically painted on the wall, provides a frame for the scenic view of each wall and gives in the room a remarkable illusion of its being an outside veranda. A wooden ceiling with cross timbers, a linoleum floor with a flagstone pattern, easy chairs and table of wicker and a gay Summer rug make their contributions.

The entrance to this interior is through a door at one corner which is finished with trim to suggest an outside doorway, complete with knocker and door mat. And to finish the effect of an exterior, one wall has two windows opening into another room equipped with green shutters and Venetian blinds, while the wall itself is covered with wide clapboards.

All these architectural and furnishing details, however, are only the setting for the murals, which, by means of cleverly concealed lights above, are flooded with natural sunlight effect. The perspective of the garden scene chosen by the artist was cleverly arranged so as to lead the eye across the immediate foreground of open lawn and paths to vistas down flower-bordered alleys or beneath gracefully drooping tree foliage to distant meadows. The painter, with considerable artistry, developed the composition of each of the three sides of the interior in a different way and yet combined them into a coherent whole.

At one side a broad grassy terrace is depicted with lawn chairs and a gay umbrella, and, beyond the garden, a distant mountain view. This scene merges into a formal garden on the adjoining wall, with terraces rising one above the other, box hedges and flower gardens. A suggestion of a stately Italian or Spanish garden takes up the space of the remaining wall, and there are a tiled terrace and a sunken pool in the foreground.

By keeping his color scheme close to three dominant colors the artist was able to simulate reality with considerable decorative effect. With the aid of the soft lighting one receives the suggestion of a restful Summer garden flooded with sunlight. The lighting is so arranged that even when one is standing close to the painted wall no shadow is thrown on the painting.

While this type of wall decoration has all the unusualness of a new idea, it is, as Mr. Paige points out, but a continuation with modern aids of the effect sought by the early makers of wall-papers, who painted rustic scenes by hand to give this outdoor illusion to an interior.

AT this time of year our interest in furniture turns from the interior to the exterior of the house, where on porch, terrace and lawn, a good deal of the life of the household goes forward in the Summer months. Furniture for open air living spaces has for a number of years been achieving a distinction of its own. Creating new types in wood or wicker is an interesting new field for the talents of the designer, for here no tradition need disturb him and every man is free to invent and develop the kind of chair or table or settee he feels will best suit the new and active outdoor life that now goes on about the American Summer home.

One of the most original workers in this field of new furniture for new needs is Carroll French, who combines the talents of cabinet maker with those of designer, wood carver and colorist, all in a high degree of artistry. In an exhibition at the Arden Galleries one can see his work in many forms of furniture adapted for the Summer home or the country garden.

Characteristic of Mr. French's designs is the use of semi-circular supports. A garden bench may have the two ends supported by two slender square timbers in the form of half circles which rest on a supporting stretcher on the ground. One of his latest outdoor chairs has two complete circles of wood which form the supports of the seat. The chair has an awning that may be pulled above the head of the occupant when necessary. The circular form of construction is used for tables, sometimes in a more complicated combination of several curved pieces. In one of his most interesting garden chairs, the side, arms and back are all constructed of the curved wood with obvious attention to the engineering possibilities of support and stress. In a chaise longue for the outdoors he utilizes a woven rush seat instead of wood, as he also does in side chairs for a dining table.

On all of his pieces, Mr. French uses more or less carving. This is handled with an interesting sense of the character of the oak, a wood which he almost always employs, and the informal outdoor air that he seeks in furniture intended for terrace use. Rabbits, squirrels, birds, are carved on the heavy parts of the designs, but with their form only suggestively indicated so that the sturdiness of the timber is not impaired.

Some of the carving is developed in slightly incised designs, as in the cross-pieces on the backs of some of his chairs. Often the background of ornamentation is touched with dull colors, which throw the main pattern into relief. On a trestle table, dining places are indicated on the surface by decorative signs of the zodiac.

MR. FRENCH'S art extends to garden gates, of which there were several on display. On the tail posts of one are heads of horses. A centre splat bears a carved design of dancing animals. A more formal piece of carving is another gate in which the oak has been heavily lacquered in the Chinese manner, with the gate itself a panel done in foliage, with birds on the branches of trees. Wrought iron sometimes enters into his designs and offers a contrast with the brilliant red lacquer.

Several huge doors, each an important work in itself, are on display, together with some of Mr. French's indoor furniture, such as a carved and colored chest of drawers and a threefold screen of wood panels. The artist's delight in animals is shown in a number of small wall panels in low relief interestingly colored.

Mr. French was born and reared in a lumber camp, which accounts no doubt for his unusual understanding of the character of wood. He early learned the importance of having structural lines follow the grain, and of designing his pieces within the natural limitation of the medium.

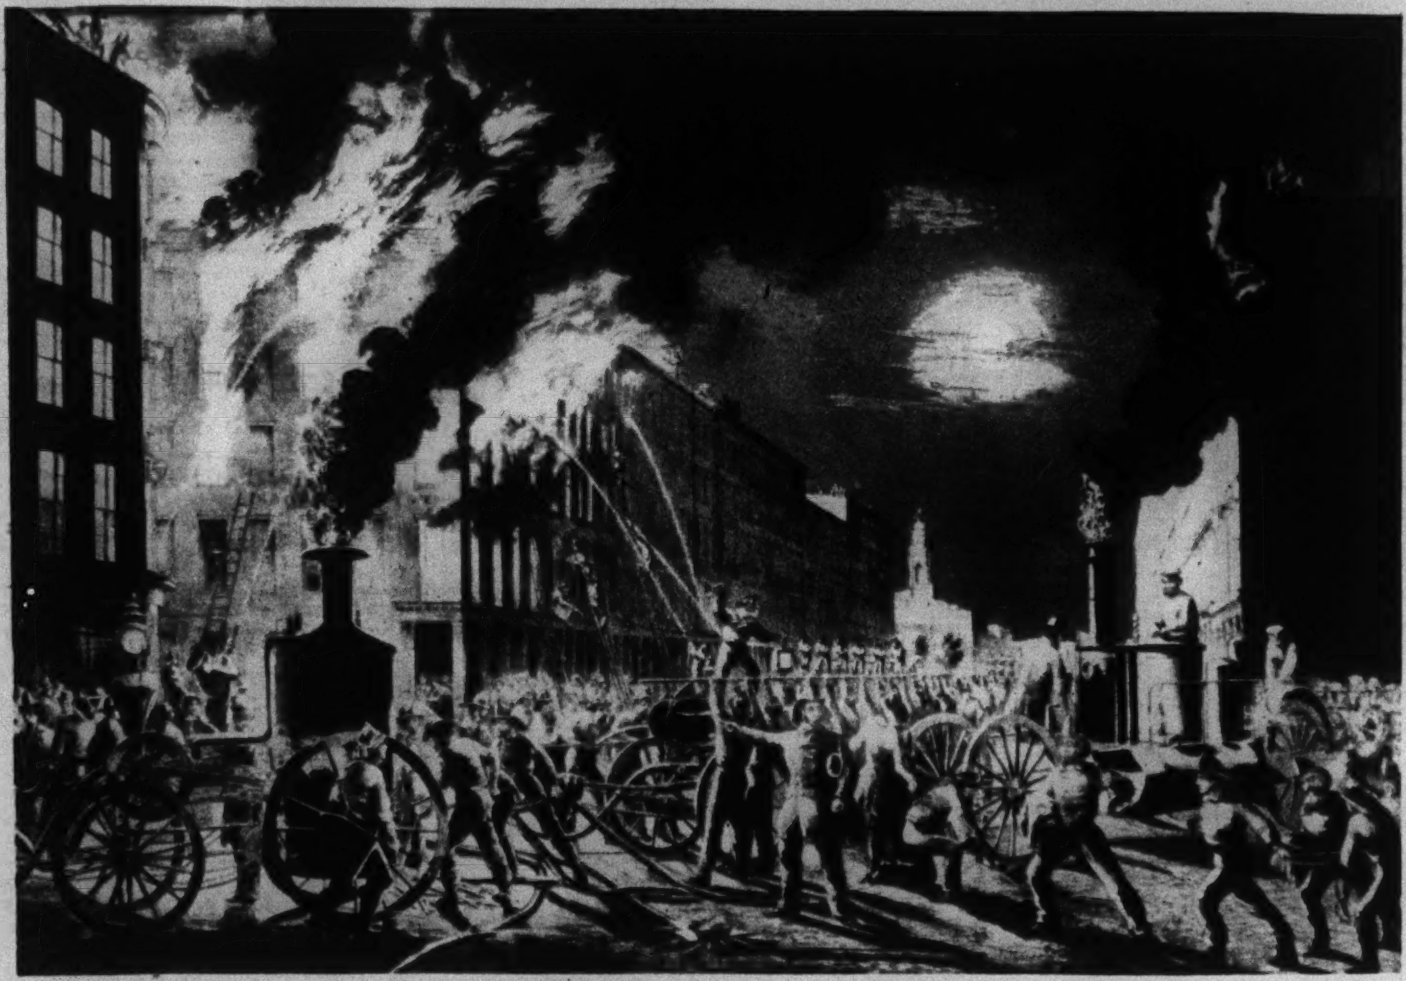
PRINTMAKERS TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

How Currier & Ives Made Cheap Pictures That Bring High Prices Today



One of "The Life of a Fireman" Series Executed by Louis Maurer.

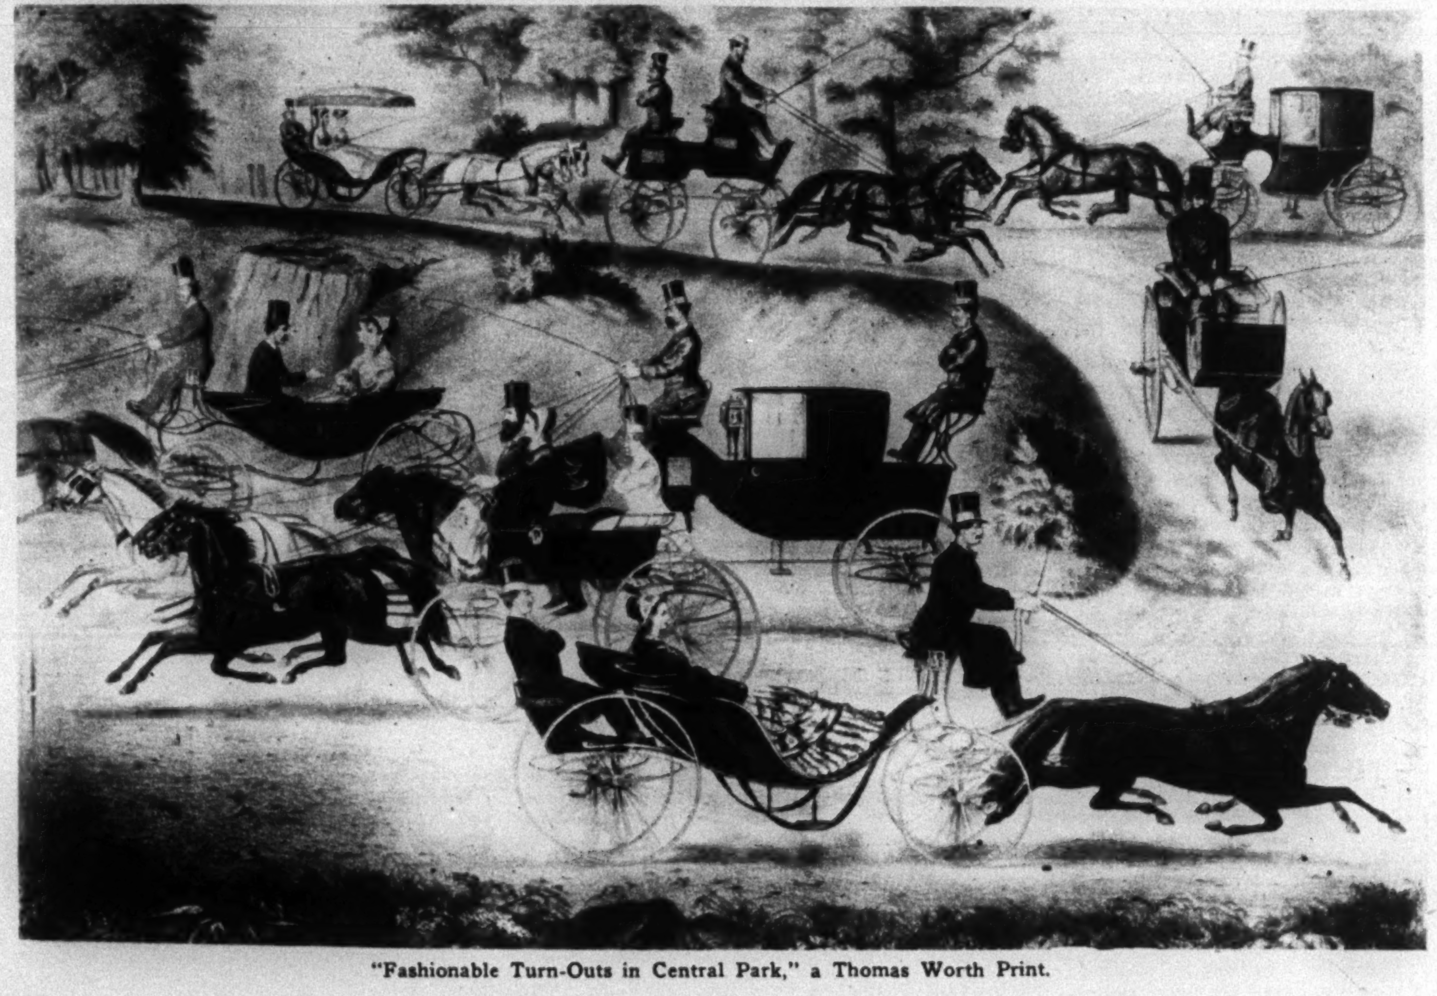
By H. I. BROCK

HALF a century's service as "Printmakers to the American People"—confessed purveyors of "cheap and popular" pictures—has in the case of Currier & Ives been translated within the last decade into a favor with collectors so great that it is the traffic in these colored lithographs which pays the rent of more than one art dealer along Fifth Avenue whose business might be supposed to be principally with old masters. Pictures that after hanging on tavern walls or in the homes of the plain people had been for a generation retired to the attic—pictures that between 1835 and 1885 sold at retail for anywhere from twenty-five cents to three dollars or so, pictures that a score of years ago could hardly be given away are now scrambled for by millionaires and curious connoisseurs. Many rare prints are worth in the market up to $1,500,—one has actually brought $3,000, and an expensive book, dealing entirely with the Currier & Ives output was recently issued.

Obviously, since that art for arts sake about which this generation is so keen is entirely absent in the Currier & Ives product, what is basically responsible for the present fashion of collecting the prints is exactly what was originally responsible for the wide popularity which attended upon the original publication. It is the content of the pictures—that content being the reflection of American life in its homespun aspects and that in terms at once simple, broad and literal. To the American of the period the mirror was held up to the everyday life of himself and his neighbors. For the American of today the quaint past touched by his boyhood or projected in the talk of his elders, and thus sentimentally high-lighted, is presented in a vivid close-up. How the close-up was obtained becomes matter of increasing curiosity as more and more of us, in this age of almost instantaneous photographic news service, acquire, or renew, familiarity with these old pictures—representations of bygone horse races, fire engines, railway trains, park parades of fashion, Thanksgiving home-comings, clipper ships and frigates, street scenes along Broadway, maids and swains, brides and grooms, the Wild West and what not. How were those old colored lithographs made?

As it happens, there is a first-hand witness of the whole process, a man still alive who was one of the most important of the actual makers of Currier & Ives prints. This man, only a couple of years shy of his first century, lives in New York in the same house in Forty-third Street, just beyond the southwest corner of its intersection with Ninth Avenue, which has been his home for sixty years—and a very comfortable house it is. He is a very spry little old man who held on as a crack rifle shot till a few years ago and who won a blue for horsemanship at Madison Square Garden at the very first Horse Show that was held there, which was in 1863. Even now he still paints pictures of horses and Indians and of his old friend Buffalo Bill. From 1852 to 1860 he was working as artist and lithographer in the Currier & Ives shop in Spruce Street, just around the corner from Nassau, and doing famous trotters and volunteer firemen and a wide variety of other subjects both on paper and on the stone.



"Fashionable Turn-Outs in Central Park," a Thomas Worth Print.

If you ask him he will show you a sample of the stone preserved in his studio on the top floor of his house and illustrate, as he did for Harry T. Peters when he was writing the book already mentioned, the method of using the slab. What he showed me was a group of all the important Union Generals assembled in a composition on horseback, and every leg of every horse accounted for as meticulously as every face of every General. This was the detailed original sketch made by himself. In evidence for comparison was the print itself, once as familiar as the photographic reproduction of the painting which assembles the allied commanders in the late World War.

The lithographic rendering, beginning with a traced outline from paper and elaborately worked up on the stone, was naturally missing, the stone itself having long disappeared, no doubt. But that, too, had been the work of the same hand, and, as the print showed, it was by no means a slavish copy of the sketch, let alone that it had been worked up with much more care. Such matters as the horses' bridles, for example, were complete in every strap and buckle. Accuracy of detail is a characteristic of Currier & Ives artists, and this particular artist, Louis Maurer, has been, as we have seen, a horseman as well as a marksman. The making of this plate represented six or eight weeks' work.

MR. MAURER came to New York from Biebrich on the Rhine when he was 19 years old. He arrived in 1851 on the sailing packet Seine, thirty-nine days out of Havre. Besides his father's trade of cabinetmaker, he had learned perspective, drawing, ivory carving and the art of the lithographer, invented by his countryman Alois Senefelder thirty-seven years before Maurer was born. He went to work for Nathaniel Currier within a year's time of his landing. At that date Currier had been in business with his "Grand Central Depot of Cheap and Popular Prints" some eighteen years. James M. Ives, who was already associated with Currier as bookkeeper, became a member of the firm in 1857. Those were the days when the shipbuilders still had their fine houses along East Broadway and Grand Street, and their shipyards along the East River from Corlears Hook up and down. The Maurers lived on the lower east side thereabouts in a street where there were many wooden houses.

At the same time there lived in Greenwich Village—in Hammond Street, now West Eleventh—a youth named Thomas Worth. Thomas Worth sold his first sketch to Currier & Ives for $5 in 1855, when he was 18 years old, and afterward made for that concern many pictures of famous horses and the series of Darktown comics. He, too, lived to a ripe old age—hard on 90—and was for years a well-known figure about Amos Stellenwerf's tavern, called the Lake House, near Islip, where Long Island fanciers of nags—particularly trotters—resorted for food and drink, horse trading and the swapping of yarns well down into the memory of men younger than the writer of these lines. The barroom had a sanded floor at the Lake House and, to quote Harry Peters, the old place was "Queen Anne before and Mary Ann behind." That is a fair description of many a house of that vintage on the Eastern seaboard, the like of which may be found in many a Currier & Ives print.

THE point of telling all this is that it is to Worth and Maurer between them that is owing what direct knowledge we have of how the "printmakers to the American people" produced the goods with which the market was so well stocked, for Worth before his death wrote down his reminiscences. He also was a good horseman and a crack shot, besides being a member of the New York Yacht Club—which is not the sort of thing a mere working artist is apt to be in our day. In his boyhood (in the 1840s), he tells us, high bluffs rose to the west of Seventh Avenue and on those bluffs lived squatters who carried on peddling and other operations with hand carts. These carts were pulled by a man in front, with two to four dogs hitched underneath and likewise pulling, and frequently a woman behind to push and kick the dogs when they were laggard.

According to Worth, Ives "could see the point of a comic picture without hunting for it, although a religious man." Likewise, he was a jolly companion in visits to the various race tracks to which he proceeded with Worth or Maurer in tow in order to "take" the horses. Perhaps this jollity was hedged with dignity, however, because an unpublished Worth drawing exists which bears this legend. "Mr. Ives of the Currier & Ives print service at the race track at Hartford had his hat taken off by that celebrated trotter, Judge Fullerton, one of the most vicious beasts of all time." It was Worth who did Lady Suffolk, who in the 1840s smashed all records up to date under saddle and to sulky, but it was Maurer who did the mighty Lexington after a famous victory at the Union Race Course in 1853 and had to finish the job, after the daylight had failed, by the feeble glimmer of a stable lantern.

Backgrounds for such pictures were roughly indicated on the spot by Worth or Maurer or—what seems to have been frequently the case where the layout was elaborate—an Englishwoman named Fanny Palmer, another more or less regular Currier & Ives artist, was sent to the spot to draw the background and Worth or Maurer or somebody else afterward put in the figures. This was done under the direction of Ives, who was himself an artist, self-taught but competent. Probably the next step was to turn the whole thing over to John Cameron to put on the stone, though as we have seen, Maurer, being both artist and lithographer, might himself carry on the process. At any rate, this John Cameron was one of the most prolific of the firm's lithographers. He made a great many changes in the "copy"—often adapting the sketch very much to suit himself, but there are marked sketches, "models" and proofs to show that the changes were sometimes expressly ordered by Currier or Ives—especially the latter, whose flair for what the public wanted was admittedly extraordinary.

FOR many years—the years of prosperity—the business of the firm was carried on at 152 Nassau Street, which was the "store," and at 33 Spruce Street, which was the "shop" or factory. Thomas Worth tells how the Duke of Newcastle, in attendance on Edward VII during his famous visit as Prince of Wales, came by the store and bought a full set of the Darktown Comics, which was 100 prints. As a member of the Seventh Regiment in the front rank Worth himself, the flattered author of the comics, had already had the honor of meeting the Prince at the Battery.

Out in front of the place of business were tables on the sidewalk on fair days and these tables were stacked with the cheaper prints, with a boy in attendance to sell them. Inside was a long room with lettered and numbered bins full of prints on either side and a row of tables down the middle likewise piled with prints. The walls above the bins were hung with framed prints or with oil paintings—like, for example, the original for the bear hunting picture called "A Tight Fix" (the $3,000 price record holder) done by Arthur F. Tait. These oils also were for sale. The originals were more often pen-and-ink sketches, wash drawings or water-colors or even pencil sketches, but where an ambitious job was in hand the more ambitious medium was sometimes indicated.

At the back of the store sat Nat Currier—or rather he stood, for he had one of those desks that you stand up to when you do not use a high stool. This desk faced the length of the room and was watch-tower and post of command. Sales were made over the counter or by mail. Peddling the prints through the country was encouraged by the offer to supply the ordinary run of them in lots of 100 to 1,000 at the rate of 6 cents apiece, shipping by post 60 cents a hundred additional. Pushcart men also came in the morning and took a selection of prints against a deposit of cash. After peddling them about the streets, they came back at night, paid the wholesale rate for the prints they had sold and got back the deposit.

FREE lance artists came to the store to sell pictures for reproduction. Worth, for example, made his entry that way. He sold his sketch of an informal horse race between a buggy and an ash wagon in the city streets for $5. If the picture pleased, the fortunate free lance might get from $1 to $10. Maurer, as a regular artist and lithographer, got $12 a week when he had been with the firm for a while. This, he says, was accounted a good salary. He left regular employment with Currier & Ives, however, in 1860, because they could not see their way clear to raise him to $25 a week. He was about to be married and needed more money. For lithographic plates made at home he got at first $40 and then $50. But, as has appeared, these plates meant several weeks' work apiece.

The factory occupied the three upper floors of the five-story building at 33 Spruce Street, the walls lined with racks for the stones which the firm's quantity-production policy required. Stones of best-sellers were kept standing, stones of less popular issues were reground to be used again. On the fourth floor were the artists and lithographers, the division of whose labor—where artist and lithographer were not the same—already has been indicated. One floor was occupied by the colorists. For Currier & Ives, prints were not lithographed in color. One plate was made in one color of ink and the other colors were applied to each print separately by hand. The job was done by a team of women sitting at a long table, each woman respon-

ORANGE
Crush-Dry
A CARBONATED ORANGEADE

BRILLIANT in its jet bottle—more brilliant in the glass. Fresh orange juice from choice tree-ripened fruit, rich in health vitamins, and adroitly blended with a dash of lemon and lime, then livened with carbonated water and a taste of the peel.

For breakfast, for a draught at luncheon, or when the day's done.

"This Common Ailment

leaves its mark on body, face and mind"

" . . Yeast checks it," says Germany's most colorful physician

PROFESSOR DR. MARTIN MENDELSOHN of Berlin—no more colorful figure exists in German medicine today! No more authoritative voice than his could bring you this message of warning—and hope:—

"Constipation is the insidious enemy of our time. It affects all classes, all ages. It undermines the system, making it an easy prey to disease. Often it mars a whole life, stealing vigor and strength, clouding the mind, leaving its mark on body and face.

"Yeast prevents constipation. It stimulates the wave-like motion of the intestines necessary to effect regular elimination.

"With the cleansing of the intestines and the toning up of the system, skin blemishes such as acne and boils disappear.

"Now fresh yeast contains the increased value of the 'sunshine' vitamin D, which counteracts the pronounced ill effects of lack of sunshine."

Let 3 cakes a day of Fleischmann's Yeast keep you "regular," energetic, fit! Every cake is rich in two vitamins indispensable to health—vitamin B and the "sunshine" vitamin D. At grocers', restaurants and soda fountains. Just follow the directions on the label.

DR. MENDELSOHN was physician to the great Eleonora Duse and to the sister of Kaiser Wilhelm I. As medical adviser of the Russian Government, he reported periodically to the Czar. The entire German press recently acclaimed his latest medical book.

"My doctor advised Fleischmann's Yeast"

"I was old before my time," writes Mrs. Mabel Kinneer, Staten Island, N. Y. "As long as I can remember I had suffered from constipation. As I grew worse and worse, I visited a stomach specialist. He advised eating Fleischmann's Yeast every day. Half-heartedly I began. But very soon I noticed improvement. Now I am well. Yeast keeps me in wonderful trim."

Leading doctors of 3 countries say:—

GEHEIMRAT DR. CARL VON NOORDEN, founder of Europe's most exclusive clinic, at Frankfort, Germany, states: "The use of yeast can bring about normal functioning of the bowels. It is used constantly in my clinic."

DR. GEORGES CAUSSADE, physician of the world-famous Paris Hospital, "l'Hôtel-Dieu," says: "Yeast has a real effect on constipation and nutrition."

DR. PAOLO ALESSANDRINI, head of the hospitals of Rome, says: "Yeast has long been famous for its ability to keep the intestines active, clean."

© 1930, Standard Brands Incorporated

Fleischmann's Yeast (with the familiar yellow label) is the only yeast that contains "sunshine vitamin."

Sleep like a gentleman!

Free yourself from the discomforts of binding, ill-fitting draw-string pajamas

HERE'S SLEEPING COMFORT—and sleeping style—such as you have never known before. . . . The day of the old-fashioned pajama draw-string has passed. . . . In its place, Faultless Pajamas have the flat and flexible Nobelt—the gently resilient waistband that breathes with you, and keeps pajama trousers perfectly in place all night long, without noticeable waistline pressure.

The Nobelt has been widely imitated, but no imitations can reproduce its supreme comfort and lasting qualities. . . . No garter elastic, with rubber threads to cut into the flesh and chafe the skin, is used. Instead, the finest live sheet rubber is stitched into the very fabric, giving a soft, even pressure that you cannot feel. . . . When you button the single button of Faultless Nobelt Pajama trousers, you know that you will wake up well dressed—there will be no binding or bunching at the hips, no matter how you twist and turn. . . . And the Faultless Nobelt is guaranteed never to lose its resilience.

Faultless Nobelt Pajamas are sold everywhere—at all leading haberdashers and men's wear departments. The line is complete, with styles, colors, materials and designs to please every taste. Remember—in the U. S. A. no other men's pajama but Faultless has the Nobelt waistband. Beware of imitations. Faultless Manufacturing Company, Faultless Square, Baltimore, Maryland. New York City Sales Office, 452 Fifth Avenue (at 40th Street).

Miles of rope to interfere with true, sound rest . . . that's what each pajama draw-string helps to total. Month by month these miles are lessening in number as more men first use Faultless Pajamas—and rid themselves of draw-strings forever.

They stay up without noticeable waistline pressure

If your Nobelt waistband should lose its resilience, we will replace the entire garment without formality or delay. A guarantee slip to this effect will be found in every pair of Faultless Nobelt Pajamas.

On Nose..

Chin..

..Forehead...

These are the three places you must watch constantly for conspicuous face pores.

Shrink Large Pores to fineness with this wonderful soap

IT'S the close-ups of life that count! Don't let big pores on your nose, chin, forehead, make your skin unattractive at close range! You may forget that they are there—but you may be sure that others see them.

You can keep your face pores small and fine by daily care with Woodbury's Facial Soap, for Woodbury's actually shrinks large pores to fineness.

The first time you use Woodbury's you will notice its astringent action on your skin; you will feel how much finer and smoother it is than ordinary soaps, how much more penetratingly it cleanses.

Formulated by a skin specialist who spent a lifetime studying the skin and its needs—Woodbury's makes lovely skin texture.

It gradually reduces the size of the pores by freeing them of the hardened fatty substance that has caused them to enlarge. It contracts them to natural size and keeps them clean and active. Begin using Woodbury's today! See what new fineness of texture it will give your skin!

Around each cake you will find the booklet of Woodbury treatments, which have helped literally millions of women to build up a clear, beautiful complexion.

To meet a skin specialist's exacting requirements for a soap for the face, Woodbury's is very finely milled. This also makes it last much longer. Get Woodbury's today, and let it help you, too, to have a beautiful skin!

Woodbury's is 25 cents a cake at any drug-store or toilet-goods counter. It also comes in convenient 3-cake boxes. John H. Woodbury, Inc.—Cincinnati, Ohio.

Visit the Woodbury Beauty Salon, 1553 Broadway, New York. They will gladly advise you about your beauty problems.

Keep lovely skin texture by keeping your face pores small and fine!

Your + + + Neighbors

HERE is a neighbor you really should know. Perhaps you do say "good morning"—possibly she is a very dear friend.

We are proud to say that she is an old friend of ours—she is a Borden customer.

She is the one to tell you about the richness and purity of Borden's milk—ask her about its sweet, natural flavor—and don't forget to have her tell you about Borden's delivery service.

We are pleased to think that Borden's is today serving more than 750,000 neighbors of yours because the milk is fresh, rich and pure—because Borden's delivery service is prompt, courteous and unfailing.

Probably, too, that is why more than 50 leading New York hospitals take milk from Borden's—why nearly 100 baby specialists of nationwide reputation recommend Borden's specifically to their patients—and order it, too, for their own homes.

May we serve your family?

The Sparkling Blue of Sky and Water Match the Sparkling Vigor of their Play

THEY DIVE . . . they swim . . . they golf . . . under an azure sky. Their sun-tanned bodies glisten in the sun. Supple, muscled with steel, they move and health is in every motion. They drink "Canada Dry."

With such bodily vigor, such health, comes an exhilaration, a keenness, a marvelous sustaining quality like that of this fine old beverage, "Canada Dry." For clear as eyes which gaze out to sea . . . cool as the clean breath of the trade winds . . . "Canada Dry" has rightly taken its place as the sportsman's beverage.

And do you wonder that the healthy men and women of this country drink this fine old ginger ale? Its stimulating bodily vigor comes from basic excellence. Its very foundation is "Liquid Ginger"—which we make from selected Jamaica ginger root by a special process. This process is exclusively controlled by us and, unlike any other method, retains for "Canada Dry" all of the original aroma, flavor and natural essence of the ginger root. Rigid laboratory control assures uniformity, purity and highest quality. A special process of carbonation enables "Canada Dry" to retain its life and sparkle long after the bottle has been opened.

Try it, yourself! Notice its wonderful flavor. Taste the sportsman's beverage, reflecting in its subtle, healthy quality the vigor and drive which make aristocrats.

HAVE YOU TRIED —?

Canada Dry's new Golden Ginger Ale. Never before have you tasted a golden ginger ale with such a marvelous flavor. The secret of its delight comes from a secret and exclusive process of beverage making. Buy it where you buy "Canada Dry."

Canada Dry's new Sparkling Lime. This wonderfully refreshing beverage brings you the lure and romance of the tropics. Let it win you with its keen, cooling lime taste as it is winning countless others daily. Buy it where you buy "Canada Dry."

POUDRE
Le Début

Powder should never be rubbed into the skin. For best results apply le Debut generously, fluffing it over the face and neck with a clean puff, avoiding only the eyelids. Remove all surplus gently and with a tiny brush dust any particles of powder from brow or lashes. Now face your mirror and rejoice at the lovely lady who smiles back at you there.

Are you sure you are using the right powder?

Is it so transparent that the natural underflush of your skin shows through . . . does it cling without caking . . . is it pure, protective . . . has it a bewitching fragrance? Direct From Athens

By J. BROOKS ATKINSON.

FOR the past four or five weeks they have been playing a rough-and-tumble Athenian comedy in Philadelphia, and they mean to set it sliding through the Forty-fourth Street Theatre next Thursday. It is the "Lysistrata" of Aristophanes in a briskly sketched modern adaptation by Gilbert Seldes and an impulsive stage version by Norman-Bel Geddes. Aristophanes wrote it 2341 years ago as a lampoon against the Peloponnesian War which was impoverishing his country and making the way of the professional playwright unreasonably hard. But musket and saber still rattle here and there throughout an enlightened world, making "Lysistrata" as pertinent now as its American blood brother, "Strike Up the Band." Although "Lysistrata" is simpler and more elemental than "Strike Up the Band," and also more outrageously bawdy, the comparison is no capricious one. Whether you are living in Athens or New York, the stage is a sturdy platform for discharging ideas, and extravagant comedy is an excellent blunderbuss for scattering the shots wildly.

GREEK tragedy is more familiar to this civilization than Greek comedy. Greek tragedy evokes a severe beauty. Concerned with the gods and the heroes, ritualized, stately, measured, it strives through pity and terror to purge the human passions. The Athenian comedy is freer and broader and heartier. But still it is no idle buffoonery. Written for audiences of some cultural discrimination it masquerades as low horseplay or caricature in order to attack the current hypocrisies and demagogues the more effectively. Rowdy as Aristophanes is in the style of his skirmishes, he bristles with ideas. In the "Clouds" he lays around him at the corrupt state of education in Athens. In the "Birds" he ridicules the pretentions of a too imperialistic government. The "Wasps" pummels the abuses and vices of the law-court hangers-on. The "Frogs" is clowning criticism of the great dramatic poets. At least three of his comedies, "Peace," the "Archanians" and "Lysistrata," are anti-war propaganda, seriously, audaciously intended, though disorderly enough in expression. He was an irrepressible fellow, at odds with the government most of the time and free with gratuitous advice. After the appearance of one of his plays, which thumped the government soundly, the demagogue Cleon tried to deprive him of his civic rights by an action brought before the Senate. But long after Cleon was dead Aristophanes was still pursuing quackery and social corruption. He was not only Rabelaisian but Shavian. Not much is known about him personally, except that he loved a good beaker of wine and that he was prematurely bald, two facts that obviously belong together. But he was a man to be reckoned with in Athens.

HE was no prude. According to our current standards he was a libertine at least in his speech. And the production of "Lysistrata," with many of the ribaldries retained, raises the snobbish question of how much latitude the classics can claim. For "Lysistrata" is the story of how the women of Greece, at considerable personal inconvenience, refuse to warm the marriage beds until their warriors have sense enough to make peace and conclude a futile war; and this knockabout comedy does not mince matters about the normal instincts of the flesh. Whatever the theme suggests, Aristophanes, collaborating with Gilbert Seldes and Norman-Bel Geddes, represents on the stage with such directness that the censors instinctively muffle their ears and shield their eyes.

People of squeamish dispositions are wise in sparing themselves the discomfort of witnessing this sort of ribaldry, for there is no use pretending that all stomachs are equally eupeptic. Neither is there any use pretending that all grossness is equally licentious. Grossness in the modern theatre is usually pandering—a cynical device for fattening the box office by appealing to the prurient, like "Young Sinners." But Aristophanes came by his grossness naturally. Greek comedy was descended directly from country festivals in celebration of the vintage, when country people went round from village to village singing songs in honor of Bacchus and making whoopee in their bucolic fashion. By the time of Aristophanes Greek comedy had become a legitimate form, borrowing from tragedy such artistic refinements as choral dances, metrical patterns, scenic elaboration, masks and an elegance of diction suitable to a cultivated Athenian audience. In fact, Aristophanes had a reputation not only as a mountebank but as a poet. But still Greek comedy, being a traditional form of dramatic expression, never lost the coarseness and grotesqueness of its origin in the country and village revelries.

ALTHOUGH this does not alter the fact that, at least according to the standards of modern civilization, "Lysistrata" is full of gross animalism, it puts Aristophanes on the healthy side with Rabelais, Fielding and Sterne. It is neither Oriental voluptuousness nor Occidental leering. It is merely the unbridled speech of an Attic comedian who has an idea—or several ideas—worth listening to. Although Mr. Geddes has made no attempt to copy slavishly the classical style of producing, he has designed an extraordinarily interesting production which may well be considered a modern counterpart of the performance 2,341 years ago. Dispensing with curtains and snatching out several rows in the front of the theatre he has reared an enormous, circumambient stage setting of many levels which curls up to the Acropolis gates. Such actors as Violet Kemble Cooper, Ernest Truex, Miriam Hopkins, Mary Blair, Sydney Greenstreet, Eric Dressler and a huge company of modern choruses trudge up and down this huge contraption at a deliberate, spontaneous pace. There is more of the festival in their undisciplined fooling than of the tightly-drawn modern theatre. There is a good deal of amateurishness about it. On the whole, "Lysistrata," which is the first production of the Philadelphia Theatre Association, is, technically and textually, one of the most interesting ventures the American stage has made in several years.

THE OPENINGS

MILESTONES—Tomorrow night at the Empire. For their ninth annual revival, the Players choose this year to present, for an engagement of a week, the Arnold Bennett - Edward Knoblock play. The troupers from Gramercy Park and their guests will include Tom Powers, Selena Royle, Beulah Bondi, Dorothy Stickney, Catherine Willard, Ernest Cossart, Warburton Gamble and others not unknown to fame. To raise the curtain will be the one-act play by Austin Strong and Lloyd Osbourne, THE LITTLE FATHER OF THE WILDERNESS, also with a scintillant cast that has Francis Wilson, Walter Hampden, Margalo Gillmore, Frederick Lewis, Jerome Lawler, Augustin Duncan and Eugene Lockhart. A prologue in verse by Franklin P. Adams will be read by Edwin Milton Royle.

SPOOK HOUSE—Tuesday night at the Vanderbilt. Including its title and a recent week in Boston, there are indications that this drama by Joe Byron Totten is pretty much of a mystery play. Leo Donnelly will be the principal person in it, supported by Dorothy Blackburn, Wilfred Lytell, Leslie Bingham and others.

THE GARRICK GAIETIES—Wednesday night at the Guild Theatre. The third edition of this informal revue will find the younger generation en masse on Fifty-second Street again, amid songs and sketches provided for the occasion. Albert Carroll, Edith Meiser, Philip Loeb, Nan Blackstone, Sterling Holloway, James Norris and Ruth Chorpenning are classed as principals, and twelve composers, twelve lyricists and eleven authors have had their fling in the writing of it.

CHANGE YOUR LUCK—Wednesday night at the George M. Cohan. This is a Negro musical comedy which, by a small margin, escaped the title of "Mr. Mammy Man." Garland Howard and Hamtree Harrington will chiefly do the acting in it. Mr. Howard also wrote the book.

LYSISTRATA—Thursday night at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre. As adapted by Gilbert Seldes and staged by Norman-Bel Geddes, Aristophanes's hardy comedy comes fresh from Philadelphia triumphs of five weeks. Violet Kemble Cooper, Miriam Hopkins, Ernest Truex, Eric Dressler, Mary Blair, Sydney Greenstreet and Hortense Alden are the principal players, and there are many others.

ELECTING A MODERN TO PLAYERS CLUB HONORS

This Time It Is "Milestones," Chiefly by Mr. Bennett, Assisted by Mr. Knoblock

By H. I. BROCK.

IT was the Theatre Guild that formally conferred upon George Bernard Shaw the rank of Classic when some years ago it opened its saucy new playhouse with a "revival" of "Caesar and Cleopatra"—an action viewed by some as a liberty at large and a slap at Shakespeare in particular. Tomorrow night—as we have all been forewarned—The Players who have a key to the exclusive bit of greenery known as Gramercy Park, peeked at by ordinary citizens through iron palings, are going to promote to the rank of Old Master, Enoch Arnold Bennett. They are staging as their annual club revival "Milestones," which was principally concocted by the prodigiously prolific and amazingly versatile putter-on-the map of the Five Towns—though, of course, Edward Knoblock also contributed.

There were those who were a little shocked at the selection when it was announced a month or more ago. The Players are counted a conservative lot—dedicated as they are to the tradition of Edwin Booth, their founder. Certainly they are not avowed radicals as the Guild crew used to be. Yet, when eight years ago they first adventured upon these revivals, which have become a classic fixture in the theatrical season each year—a fixture all the more notable because the series of performances lasts for exactly one week and no more—they did not begin with Shakespeare. They began with Sheridan's "The Rivals," moved on to Goldsmith and worked up to the Bard by way of Pinero and "Trelawney of the Wells." They stayed with Shakespeare two years, and then dropped back from Elizabethan tragedy to early eighteenth-century comedy in George Farquhar's "The Beaux Stratagem." Last year they gave us Thackeray's Becky Sharp, cribbed and confined in the play which Langdon Mitchell made for Mrs. Fiske in the last year of the nineteenth century.

Thus the range of past performances up to date covered every century but our own back to the beginning of the English stage tradition which the club exists to honor. It was reserved for Mr. Bennett, with a play just 18 years old, to represent the twentieth century among the immortals. Some said that it was too much honor—even for Mr. Bennett, who, after all, is a novelist first, and a playwright only secondarily, along with being a journalist (an excellent one), a critic of life and literature, a pocket-edition philosopher, a lay sermonizer, an editor, a veteran of the British war propaganda service and Heaven knows how many other side lines efficiently pursued.

Somebody recalled an incident of the Summer of 1911, which was the year George V was crowned King and the year before "Milestones" was first produced both in London and New York. The British metropolis was at the time all agog with ceremonial goings on, because the present Squire of Doorn, then a very important and resplendent person indeed, was paying a friendly visit to his dear cousin George, now dubbed of Windsor, and was rather getting the best of the applause from George's subjects. That was because when the two majestic kinsmen went about together dear Cousin William dressed the part imperially and cut a much grander figure. An American visitor found somehow a moment when the Kaiser was not on view in an open carriage to call upon George Tyler in his London office. In the course of conversation Mr. Tyler drew open a deep drawer in his desk and asked, "Do you know anything about a fellow named Arnold Bennett?" The visitor nodded affirmatively, reeled off the titles of a string of novels, including "The Old Wives Tale" and "Clayhanger," and added that the author of these works was sitting so securely on the top of the heap in the mere world of books-to-be-read that he had announced his intention of writing a trilogy of linked masterpieces long drawn out. Mr. Tyler shifted the cigar in his face. "I've got a stack of his plays here," he said, indicating the drawer. "Guess I'd better look into them."

The very next day Mr. Tyler's late visitor met Mr. Bennett at lunch. "Just saw a drawerful of your plays in an American manager's desk," he remarked casually. "Yes," Mr. Bennett answered with that jaunty assurance which is not the least of his assets, "yes, I've written a couple of dozen plays, none of which has been produced. But they all will be."

As a matter of fact two of his plays had already been seen on the stage, "Cupid and Common Sense" and "What the Public Wants" belong to 1908 and 1909. "The Honeymoon," which has by some been called his best play, reached the boards in that very year of 1911. It was characterized as "good stage fodder" from the point of view of the audience, and as "exuding fat parts" from the point of view of the actor. The last quality, shared emphatically by "Milestones," contributed powerfully, no doubt, to the considerations which made that stage piece the choice of The Players for their ninth revival, which for the next six days will bring back to the Empire Theatre something of the gala air that used to give the old red-and-gold house glamour when Charles Frohman ruled there and with a spacious gesture "presented" Maude Adams or John Drew to fashionable New York.

The London original first night of "Milestones" was March 6, 1912. The American rights were acquired by Klaw and Erlanger within the month and the American first performance took place at the Liberty Theatre in the following Autumn—Sept. 18, to be exact. London has seen the play since the first run—scoring 607 performances—when the members of the company included Dennis Eadie and Lionel Atwill, with Haidee Wright playing the part of Gertrude. It is Gertrude who graduates from the first act as the old maid devoted to a wolfish romanticism born of frustration, and represents the most deeply etched piece of characterization in the piece. This is Mr. Bennett doing his very own stuff. For he has learned about women from intensive study, even more particularly of those who have not got what they wanted than of those who have—in spite of Carlotta and The Pretty Lady of wartime.

New York has not seen the piece again, notwithstanding the favor with which it was received, the interest which it excited, and the fact that it ran a season on Broadway and was played on the road—which had not then ceased to be a traveled way. In the original company over here were Leslie Faber and Warburton Gamble, who has assumed in The Players' revival his old part—that of Sam, the fellow who lost out because he refused to believe in iron ships in 1860. In that company Gertrude was enacted by Auriol Lee.

After nearly a score of years the piece will call for a different sort of performance, at least in one respect. For while 1912 saw two preliminary evocations of the past, leading up to an act which was supposed to be the mirror of the living present, 1930 will see a character-and-costume play in three periods, all belonging to the past—the period of 1912 falling not less beyond the Great Divide of the World War than the periods of 1860 and 1885. Inclusion of the entire action in one perspective view—even though it be a processional perspective—gives, or ought to give, to the drama greater unity and to the spectacle added pictorial values. In reading the printed text as of this date, however, you still get the effect of a most economical and efficient job on the part of Bennett plus Knoblock in creating the stage mechanism for putting over Mr. Bennett's characterization of the types of the several periods.

It may be noted here that "Milestones" does not stand out in the record as the top-notch dramatic success of its author. That honor belongs to "The Great Adventure," the play that was made out of the tale called "Buried Alive"—the burial being, as you remember, by proxy and in Westminster Abbey at that—which was produced in the following year, 1913, and ran in London for 674 performances, to the luster of which Henry Ainley and Sarah Allgood—she of the Irish Players—substantially contributed. "The Title" (1918) sprayed the House of Peers with a satire less kindly than the standard stuff invented by Sir W. S. Gilbert and still unsurpassed in efficacy. "Sacred and Profane Love," dramatized from the author's earlier "Book of Carlotta," annoyed persistent puritans and did not please excessively any great number of those who have escaped the puritan bias. It was played in New York by Elsie Ferguson in 1920 and has so much claim to distinction as that cooperation carries.

Generally speaking, though plays have been a regular by-product of Mr. Bennett's voluminous and varied literary output, and though dramatic pieces from his busy workshop, either made for the purpose or redone out of his novels, have been a regular line in the theatre for nearly twenty years, the impression prevails (and seems to be justified) that he is more skillful in the craft than mighty in the deed in the particular field in which Mr. Shaw shines refulgent. This is the less remarkable because playwriting must be included in those pot-boiling activities to which, confessedly and even boastfully, Mr. Bennett devotes a large share of his time.

It is a sort of useful activity which he commends in authors—even authors who are masters like himself of a grander manner. For his own share he has pot-boiled indefatigably and shamelessly since he first ceased being a lawyer's clerk and got his nose inside the literary shop. That shop is a pot-boiling shop, if the truth is told, and the lofty airs assumed by those who sniff disgustedly at the familiar soup-kitchen fumes are false airs, for the most part.

Perhaps the vast range of the Bennett achievement is the distance in a line full of dizzy spirals and far-flung loops from this operatic flight to his contribution of an amateur detective story to The Chatterbox way back in the days when the great world had never heard of the Five Towns; when the world was innocent of the very existence of that province of the Potteries which is adjacent in literary geography, as has been said, to Hardy's Wessex. At least both are regions of the realist who sees life on the gray-grim side—even if neither is real. By the way again, that last word—as pronounced by the persons in the realm of reel art in question—recalls to us the fact that Mr. Bennett has done at least one movie. It was called "Piccadilly," Gilda Gray of South Sea Island shimmy fame was in it and it was said in London that America was not fair to the film.

For the jealous-minded who resent the intrusion of the sometime editor of Woman of London into the gallery of Great Masters, there is comfort in the fact that the bill at the Empire is to be a double bill. An American playwright is also honored in the person of Austin Strong, who has back of him not only his own achievement but the legend of Robert Louis Stevenson and the South Seas—indeed, the piece which figures as curtain-raiser in the entertainment offered by The Players is "The Little Father of the Wilderness," of which Strong's uncle, Lloyd Osbourne, is co-author. It presents a poignantly ironical episode at the court of Louis XV and was seen in New York in 1906, with Francis Wilson in the part of the missionary monk from the American wilds. Then it was teamed up on the stage of the Criterion Theatre with Mr. Wilson's main vehicle, "The Mountain Climber."

In the Empire revival once more the "Little Father" will be the veteran comedian who is one of the few survivors of the original group in the Gramercy Park organization of "worthy actors," members of other artistic professions, and so-called patrons of the arts, among whom were counted Edwin Booth, Joseph Jefferson and William Tecumseh Sherman. It has been noised abroad also that Walter Hampden, president of The Players, will have a part in this portion of the program and will speak one line. Among Mr. Strong's outstanding successes, contributory to his title to fame, the public will recall "Three Wise Fools" and "Seventh Heaven," produced between 1918 and 1922.

Gossip of the Rialto

THERE comes, in a roundabout manner, the word that George Arliss has already settled upon a vehicle for his return to the stage next season under the Erlanger-Tyler pennon. It is said to be a play from the French, performed in Paris with no little success several seasons ago, but beyond that the information is so meager as to be nonexistent. Mr. Tyler last week refused either to confirm or deny the particulars, and there you are.

Joseph Schildkraut's contract with the motion pictures has expired, or is about to, and Charles Wagner has the notion of presenting him in the Sabatini play called "The Tyrant," acted in London five years ago by Matheson Lang. Mr. Schildkraut has the manuscript, and should the production materialize Mr. Wagner hopes that Sabatini will come over to help put it on. . . . The unhurried Charles Hopkins expects to begin his new season with Benn Levy's "Mrs. Moonlight" or Galsworthy's "The Roof." The Galsworthy play will be acted in New Haven in a week or so at the Yale University Theatre.

Mr. Belasco has at last given up any and all plans he may have had for the eventual production of "Blind Window," the play from the Hungarian which he tried out last Fall for Beth Merrill. . . . John Wray, who used to figure pretty consistently in this town both as actor and playwright, went back to Hollywood last week after a brief vacation from the cinema plants. He is under a five-year contract to the films which still has four years to go. . . . Ruth Draper will begin a London season in another week at the Vaudeville Theatre. At present she is visiting her brother in Switzerland. . . . There are a good many complaints to be heard in London these days about the bad times in the theatres, and it all has a familiar ring to a traveler from Broadway. Among the many plays to close there recently was "The Apple Cart," which, however, managed to run all season as against eleven weeks over here.

Fred Astaire is authority for the statement that "Tom, Dick & Harry," the Ziegfeldian entertainment in which he will appear with his sister and Marilyn Miller, will begin rehearsals on Aug. 15. Eddie Foy Jr. has been engaged for the show. . . . Irene Bordoni, now abroad, may have the rôle in "Princess Charming" played in London by Delysia. Toward that end negotiations, as they call them, even at this late date, are now going forward.

Fortunio Bonanova, recently of "Dishonored Lady," intends to go into operetta, and has signed a long-term contract with the Shuberts. . . . The auditorium of the Forty-fourth Street Theatre is temporarily poorer by 150 seats. They have been removed to make way for the platforms of this week's "Lysistrata" production. . . . A mystery play, "Find the Fox," is on the fire and may come along in a week or two. Its particular claim to fame is that it will contain no less than three—count 'em—murders. . . . Alexander Leftwich and Alex Yokel are planning still another revue, one bearing the name of "Tattle Tale." In it may be Smith and Dale, who no later than last night might have been found acting away in "Mendel, Inc."

Three plays which, come what may, must be listed on the credit side of the ledger, were included in last night's vanishing drama. "June Moon" closed after a stay at the Broadhurst that began in October; "Death Takes a Holiday" vacated the Barrymore after a satisfactory run, while "Mendel, Inc." departed after a longer engagement hereabout than even the most sanguine

MORE ABOUT THE DRAMA, BOTH DOMESTIC AND FOREIGN

THESE WOULD BE COMEDIES

Two Otherwise Serious Authors Pause to Be Sprightly, and Suffer Accordingly

BERLIN, May 16.

EVERY year sees the import of a very considerable number of light comedies into Germany. France is represented most fully, then come Hungary, England and finally America, tagging along at the end. It has become one of the bromides of the international theatre that the Teuton is not at home in the frothy form. A routinist of the Berlin school can, it is true, turn out a piece of broadly clipped farce to fit one of the local purveyors of slapstick, but this is mere carpentry of the stage which never penetrates beyond the local borders. When it comes to the more graceful frivolities of comedy the hack is bound to fail and the "higher class" dramatist thinks he is lowering himself. Last week plays by two of Germany's internationally best-known authors were produced and both of them suffered from the high-hat malady.

At the State Playhouse Lion Feuchtwanger was represented by "Will Hill Be Pardoned?" ("Wird Hill amnestiert?"), one of the "Three Anglo-Saxon Comedies" which he wrote over seven years ago. It has had to wait all this time for a production. This might speak against the play, but another of the same group, "Calcutta, May 4," had to slumber between covers for thirteen years before it was finally brought out. Owing to the splendid performance of Rudolf Forster in the leading rôle, it is now one of the backbones of the State theatre's répertoire. The latest piece will not repeat this rather exceptional phenomenon. It is evidently an attempt at a Bernard Shaw play, written not only in the Irishman's technique but even in his manner. But whereas in the better plays of the Celt the humor lashes at fundamentals, here it seems to exist only for the sake of the laugh which it may excite.

The plot skeleton is constructed around Aileen, an attractive girl, who starts a campaign to try to get her fiancé Hill pardoned. This young government official has been imprisoned for neglecting to carry out an order which sentenced a number of people to death. Aileen's charm is so considerable that she wins for her cause a group of influential men, including a young airplane manufacturer, an old millionaire, the secretary of an important politician and an influential newspaper editor. They all hope to be rewarded for their efforts by favors of the girl. The first act includes a protest meeting to rouse public opinion in Hill's favor; the second introduces a vacillating politician, controlled by his phlegmatic secretary. In the last two scenes the plot is unnecessarily complicated by the suspicion that Aileen has murdered the politician because he has refused to use his influence for Hill.

Of course, the parliamentarian has not really been killed and turns up in time to loose this knot, which has not interested the audience in the slightest. Also Hill himself puts in an appearance, as he has been let out on temporary probation. He is anything but what one would expect a suffering martyr to be—the imprisonment has made him pudgy and twisted his ideas toward the conservative. He has no longer any desire to feature as a promulgator of liberal ideas. His ideal is to settle somewhere quietly on a farm. He even admits to the girl that he failed to carry out the order merely because he never received the telegram telling him to do so. Aileen, who has been fighting for him on the basis of revolutionary justice, is at first horribly discouraged, but when he goes to sleep in his chair she realizes that she cares for him as a human being and is going to stay by him, leaving her other richer and more attractive suitors out in the cold.

The production at the State Playhouse was an excellent one, surely the best that Jessner has made this year. Lucie Mannheim was as enticing as ever and the numerous character rôles showed the ensemble of this State subsidized house at its very best. Here smaller rôles are always brilliantly played; it is only the leading parts that are usually colorless and impersonal.

At the Theater in der Stresemannstrasse, Walter Hasenclever was considerably more successful than his somewhat better known confrère. This young playwright has already run through most of the phases that characterize a long literary career. In his early youth, when still in his teens, his specialty was the poetical play of social and moral revolt. But of late years he has swung sharply to the satirical comedy, each season with a trifle less satire. This year his play is only very mildly seasoned with the salt of irony. Its title is "Napoleon greift ein" ("Napoleon Takes a Hand") and it treats the return of that historical personage in the present day. The first scene is in a museum of wax works. Napoleon is in the same room with the French murderer Landrau and has come to realize from the conversation of the visitors that the world is considerably less interested in him than in the criminal. So he decides to return to life and take a hand in modern politics. Landrau, who is a realist of life, advises him against the step, but, when he persists, helps him redress himself in modern clothes, which he takes from various wax figures, including Mussolini, Stresemann and President Wilson.

Quite by chance, the Emperor gets into a meeting of the international disarmament committee. He sees that the American observer has all the power in his hands by being able to refuse further credits unless the Europeans agree to form a United States of Europe and disarm completely. Napoleon in a heated speech tries to convince the delegates to join their armies under his command, but, although they are impressed by his fire, they realize that resistance against the economic superiority of America would be useless. As he has no credentials, they turn him out of the meeting. But the American's mistress, a very charming French actress, has taken a great fancy to him and invites him to visit her that evening. Her name is Josephine and, because she reminds him of his first and only love, he goes.

The next morning the American appears and offers Napoleon the command of the neutral European army, which will be merely there to keep the peace. He refuses, saying that he would take it only on the condition that he were allowed to fight against America. The actress has been playing the historical Josephine in a film and the director arrives to tell her that they cannot continue, as the actor engaged to play Napoleon has been taken ill. She suggests the real Napoleon for the part and the latter acquiesces with some compunctions. In the studio he learns that the real Josephine had been untrue to him, a fact which he had never known during his lifetime. Infuriated, he strangles the actress and is taken off by the police. But the girl does not die and when she comes to confesses that she enjoyed herself tremendously. After having been put in an asylum, Napoleon escapes and returns to the museum, glad to be back again in peaceful surroundings. He has learned that there is no call for heroes in the modern world.

The idea behind the play is fresh and amusing enough, but it is not carried through with any sort of consistency. The first and second scenes are on a high satirical plane, but the bedroom act slips down to the level of the French comedy of sex and the episode in the talker studio is pure burlesque. But the play is entertaining throughout and perhaps fulfills its object all the better for its lack of intellectual integrity. Hasenclever wants to amuse his public, and he succeeds. Hasenclever is a very astute young man and I feel sure that he will go on turning out an actable comedy yearly. There are advantages in leaving one's ambitions by the roadside.

Werner Kraus was the Napoleon. I am aware that the real Bonaparte looks slightly different from this actor, but I think it was a mistake on the first Emperor's part. I much prefer Werner Kraus's impersonation. I suggest that from now on his photographs be used in the biographies. If Napoleon had studied with him instead of with Talma, history might be more readable. Maria Bard is the Josephine.

GILDING THE GUILD

Again the Youngsters Plan a Romp, This Time at the Mother House in 52d St.

WHEN the first "Garrick Gaieties" was given at the Garrick Theatre on Thirty-fifth Street, that playhouse was the Theatre Guild's home and the "Gaieties" was a post-season diversion staged on Sunday night to entertain a club group of Guild members. Thus it was a campus effort, poking fun at such divers items as the Chopin melodies in the then current "The Guardsman," the inability of Helen Westley to arrange her coiffure, the long cigarette holders of Philip Moeller and the morals of Elizabeth, Queen of England. It was planned for three performances and its first was played before a gathering which included members of the press and subscribers. Boasting tunes and lyrics by the now famous team of Rodgers and Hart, it seemed to please its initial audience, and on the following Sunday night it was repeated. A few days later it was decided that the general public should be given the opportunity of hearing the show's melodies, chortling at its sophistries and of witnessing its sketch in which "nymphs and dryads" were chased by "satires."

The new "Garrick Gaieties," which awaits its première tomorrow night, will be the third of the series, and four years have elapsed since the last one was given hereabout. The first "Gaieties" was produced May 17, 1925, and the second a year later. Both had lengthy runs and produced music and performers which were absorbed into what is so cunningly called the professional theatre. For the first "Garrick Gaieties" made no pretense of "professionalism." Many of its players were youngsters who worked in the Guild mob scenes, carried spears, made offstage noises and did the more unimportant bits in the shows. Since that time many of them have become well known; there is, in case any one wishes to examine it, the present status of Romney Brent, Betty Starbuck, June Cochrane, Philip Loeb, Libby (then known as Elizabeth) Holman, Edith Meiser, Bobbie Perkins and Sterling Holloway.

Of these alumni, Mr. Brent has played most recently in "The Little Show," the revue which finds Miss Holman's voice now ringing out in baritone measures over Lake Michigan. Mr. Loeb has lately chirped the delectable ditties of "June Moon," and will probably do so again in the Fall. Miss Meiser has appeared in "Peggy Ann" and vaudeville, while "Animal Crackers" claimed Miss Perkins until she took up matrimony. And Mr. Holloway's almost uncanny resemblance to a chrysanthemum has not been altered by the passing years.

Like the earlier "Gaieties," this new edition of the series came about when a group of young people connected with the Guild seemed seized with the urge to produce a revue. About ten weeks ago a group of them went to the Guild board to seek permission to do a show. They were given the permission, told that they might use the Guild Theatre and asked to have material ready for a preliminary showing. Thus a production committee consisting of Philip Loeb, Kate Lawson, Ruth Chorpenning, Mr. Holloway and Louis Simon was formed, and Olin Howland was engaged to stage the dances. Mr. Loeb undertook the post of supervising the production.

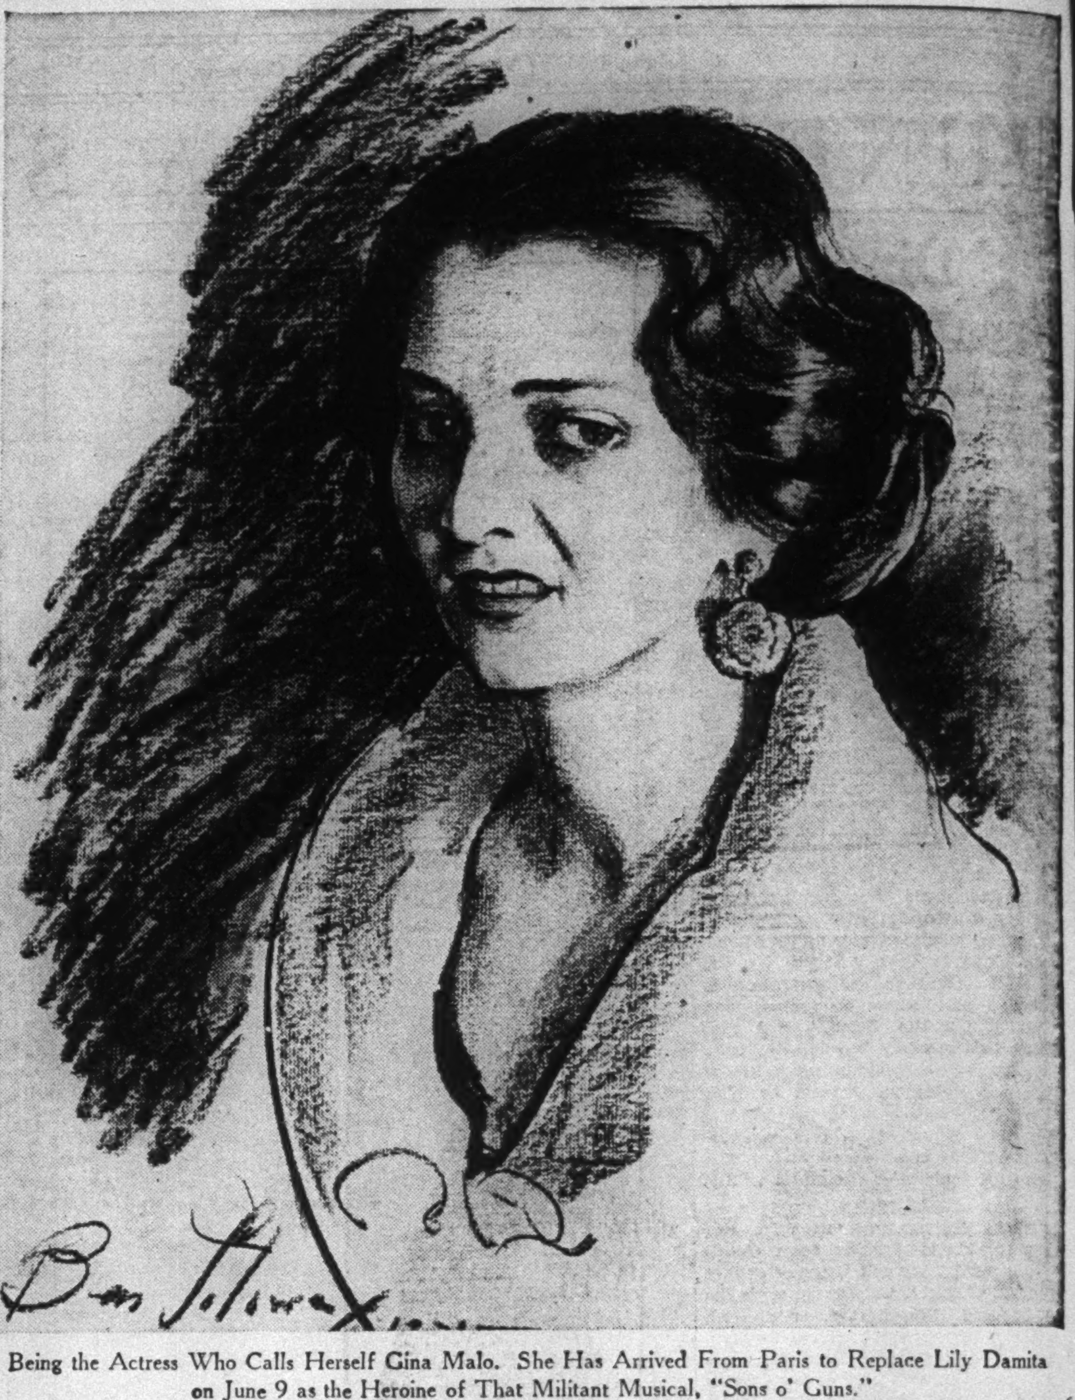
In it will be many of those who appeared in the other "Gaieties." Miss Meiser, for instance, was in the first and second of the series, as were Mr. Holloway, James Norris and Hildegarde Halliday. New to the series is Albert Carroll, heretofore of the "Grand Street Follies," produced until this year with regularity by the Neighborhood Playhouse; Ruth Chorpenning, who has appeared in several Guild productions recently; Edith Sheldon, a bedimpled dancer; Cynthia Rogers, a contralto who has acted in several comedies hereabout; Imogene Coca, who might be described as a pert ingenue; Thelma Tipson, who can imitate Hope Williams so that some will say, "Well, sir, now if that doesn't just sound like her," and Nan Blackstone, a crooning singer, who was in Mrs. Selwyn's revue and who also entertains the early birds at the Club Abbey, one of Fifty-ninth Street's nocturnal haciendas. Otto Hulett, another of the Neighborhood Playhouse group, is also present.

Since Rodgers and Hart have departed to fashion musical comedies for other producers, the music and lyrics of the new "Gaieties" are being fashioned by a young army. Well, maybe not an army, but twelve composers and as many lyricists. Among the composers may be noted the names of Aaron Copland, Kay Swift, the Charles M. Schwab (leather, not steel, is this man's business), who has so often worked with Henry Myers, and Vernon Duke. Miss Swift wrote several numbers for "The Little Show," and Mr. Duke, it seems, is not Mr. Duke at all, but according to a Boston correspondent, he is "Vladimir Dukelsky, a rising young Russian who lives off musical plays in New York and London so that he can write symphonies for Koussevitsky." This Koussevitsky is the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, his Christian name is Serge and he plays the double-bass, but he won't be in "Gaieties." It seems that almost every one else will be.



Being the Actress Who Calls Herself Gina Malo. She Has Arrived From Paris to Replace Lily Damita on June 9 as the Heroine of That Militant Musical, "Sons o' Guns."

CHICAGO HAS A TASTE OF THE DOLDRUMS

CHICAGO, May 29.

THE condition of the Chicago stage at present reminds one of the convict, incarcerated for life, who described his sentence as being "from now on." The theatres here have entered the same indefinite phase. From now on until Labor Day, apparently, the same old refrain will be muttered week after week: "Nothing new in town."

Of course, if economic conditions should follow the urgent hints of the financial writers and improve, there will be an occasional upspringing of valiant, adventurous managers who own what they think are good Summer shows. A myth has run down through the ages that Chicago is a nice spot for inexpensive comedies during the heated months. But at present nothing is promised; and when theatre managers are asked if they have anything in sight they groan as disconsolately as if the end of the world were at hand.

The playbills present a fair line-up of end-products which will endeavor to stagger along as far as possible. Richard Bennett is thriving in "Solid South" at the Harris, and in its twin theatre next door "The Little Show" is enjoying plenty of patronage. Minna Gombell in "Nancy's Private Affair" decided to close at the Erlanger next Saturday night, and then changed her mind. She will move to the Playhouse, from which "Your Uncle Dudley" is withdrawing. Shows at the Erlanger seem to have developed a habit of moving to the South Michigan Avenue sector of the playgoing district. Charlotte Greenwood recently hopped from the Erlanger to the Studebaker (breaking the jump with a week in Detroit!!), and is hoping for the best.

There are changes in cast to record. Donald Brian, an amazing exponent of protracted youthfulness, has replaced Reginald Owen in "Candle-Light," at the Princess. That smart little comedy is doing well, and Eugenie Leontovich is sustaining her reputation as a Chicago favorite. . . . John A. Willarde, leading man of the neighborhood stock company at the Kedzie Theatre all season, has taken Stanley Ridges's rôle in "Nancy's Private Affair," and in the same play Ruth Gates is acting in place of Beatrice Terry. . . . Wallace Ford (billed as Wally here) went into the line-up of "Many-A-Slip," at the Cort, about ten days ago, supplanting Douglass Montgomery. Sylvia Field and Dorothy Sands are withdrawing from the cast at the end of the week. The former will be replaced by Lotta Garrity.

Charles (Chic) Sale has changed his characterization in "Hello, Paris," at the Grand Opera House, and the show has been improved by this reformation. Lois Deppee, a fine Negro baritone, is winning plaudits for his singing of "Deep Paradise" in Mr. Sale's vehicle. It's an anthem in praise of oil wells.

"Sisters of the Chorus" hasn't shocked the natives. Although the play was pronounced raw and ribald stuff by the press, it keeps on going at the Apollo. . . . "Strictly Dishonorable" will end its run at the Adelphi this Saturday night, with sixteen weeks for its record. . . . The Goodman will bring Galsworthy's "Escape" and its season to a close on June 7. A statement from the trustees of the Art Institute about the success or failure of the drive for 10,000 subscriptions may be expected then. No one believes, however, that this civic répertoire venture will be discontinued.

The light opera productions at the Civic Theatre, under the auspices of the Chicago Opera Company, are doing well. "The Gondoliers" will give way to another Gilbert and Sullivan opus next Monday night—"The Yeomen of the Guard." More than ten years have passed since it was sung here.

The Palace Theatre is expected to surrender as a first-class vaudeville house within a month or two or three, and adopt a policy of continuous vaudeville, with films for good measure.

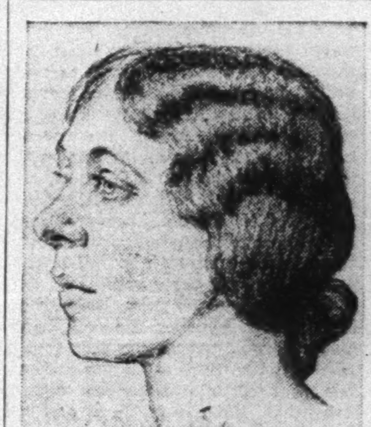
AN ONCOMING ACTRESS TRIES MAGDA

LONDON, May 15.

GWEN FFRANGCON-DAVIES has reached an interesting point in her career. Having established a reputation in plays that require exceptional powers but do not fully display them, she has now begun to tackle the parts in which great actresses have found their opportunity. At Oxford some months ago she gave us a memorable Lady Macbeth; the Ophelia she played to Henry Ainley's Hamlet a few weeks later was a piece of very telling and even original work; and this week she has appeared at the New Theatre as Magda. Here, I think, she achieved only a qualified success. She had, so to speak, to play down to it intellectually. She was not physically the dominating woman a Magda should be, and, attempting to make up for this deficiency, she over-intellectualized the character.

Sudermann's piece gives the actress plenty of latitude. Duse raised the prima donna to the dignity of a great lady and, going far beyond the author's intentions, made her spiritually beautiful. The play stood this transfiguration tolerably well; but it stands less well the introduction of a Magda who seems to be at once too brilliantly intelligent and too unfeeling ever to dream of sacrificing her career out of pity for her wooden-headed and wooden-hearted old father. Take, for instance, the return of the brilliant singer to the home of her unhappy childhood. She has yielded to a feeling for the old place which she cannot wholly explain to herself, she is humanly but rather vulgarly thrilled by the contrast between her own grandeur and her parents' unchanged provincialism. In showily brilliant chatter she indulges her sense of her own astonishing and romantic career. Her chatter hurts her parents, but she is hardly aware of how much.

The Magda of Miss Ffrangcon-Davies is altogether too intelligent not to know. The wounding things that fall from the lips of this brilliant little woman have behind them the wish to wound. And thereby she forfeits something of the sympathy which Sudermann intended her to win in this scene. Throughout the play we get the impression of wit and ironic understanding held in reserve, of a keen intelligence working beyond the control of the heart; and, accordingly, the collapse of her free will, not very convincing in any circumstances, becomes quite incredible. It should be understood, however, that working along what seemed to be wrong lines the actress showed a deftness in expression, a grace and a delicacy of her own that went far to distract attention from what is obsolete in Sudermann's treatment of the conflict of authoritative Prussian fathers with their assertive daughters.



Gwen Ffrangcon-Davies.

She achieved many perfect things in a little scale, playing Providence to her young sister with exquisite tact and grace, reawakening and ridiculing the passion of her first seducer with the most delicate art and putting the local grandes dames to flight with a delightfully casual flaunting of her scarlet; but in most of the opportunities for bravura acting in which the part abounds she missed fire. As for the piece itself, it was admirably produced and immensely enjoyed. The intense localism of its atmosphere, the narrowness and strictness of the official and military middle-class puritanism of a provincial town of the '90s, once a stumbling-block to the understanding of an English audience, are more acceptable now that the whole play has become a museum piece. The production was greatly helped by a piece of admirably strong and sympathetic acting by George Merritt as Colonel Schwartze. It explained and, in some degree, excused the character.

Vera Beringer can hardly be blamed for failing to make a good stage play of Leon Feuchtwanger's novel, "The Ugly Duchess." There is a profound difference between this story of the German Messalina and the story of "Jew Suss." "Jew Suss" was a feat of creative imagination; "The Ugly Duchess" is little more than a piece of historical reconstruction. The scrupulously fine network of wrangling diplomacies, of political ambitions and cross-purposes, that gives to the book value and interest as a piece of historical reconstruction, is almost entirely absent from the play. Detached from its background, the duel for power between Margarete, the pitifully ugly Tyrolean Duchess, and the beautiful Agnes von Flavon evokes very little feeling. The stage is crowded with shadowy figures of favorites, priests and barons all impelled by motives that we only dimly understand. Their plottings and counter-plottings hinge upon political considerations of which we have no knowledge. There emerges a thin, jerky story of violent deeds in which there is sometimes visible a good intention which never quite gets itself carried out. We are intended to realize the pathos of a woman whose ugliness, by depriving her of normal human satisfactions, has driven her into courses that are alien to her nature. But the character remains more or less static throughout the play.

We meet Margarete first as a woman who still allows herself to dream of love. The beautiful Agnes lifts her finger and the dream is shattered. Ten years later Agnes is her husband's mistress. Margarete poisons him, and he dies in her presence with the name of her hated rival on his lips. Another wide gap of years, and affairs of State enable her to send her rival to the scaffold. She is left at the end to endure the mockery of a ghost. Even in death Agnes is beautiful and all men prefer her to the triumphant but still repulsive Duchess. The pathos of the unhappy woman is almost as great when the play begins as when it ends.

In an adaptation like this we may question the wisdom of attempting the impossible or we may choose to applaud the courage which has launched the adapter on an enterprise foredoomed to failure. At the Arts Theatre last night the audience chose the more gracious alternative and some warrant for the applause might be found in the measure of success which Esme Beringer achieved with the figure of the Duchess. Made up with unflinching courage and considerable ingenuity to resemble the famous portrait of the Maultasch, she succeeded in conveying the pathos of a woman handicapped by the accident of ugliness. She failed, however, to suggest the gradual perversion of a fine nature. The Maultasch must have been flamboyant; but Miss Beringer is not flamboyant. She is dry, precise and kindly. Minnie Blagden, as the fascinating Agnes, curtseyed her way through the play with a pretty insolence, and from the long cast the Jew of Philip Brandon and the prince of O. B. Clarence distinguished themselves.

NEWS AND GOSSIP OF THE BROADWAY SECTOR

predicted at the time of its première. . . . In another week Mr. Cohan will abandon his revival of "The Tavern" in favor of his revival of "The Song and Dance Man," and Mr. Carroll's "Sketch Book" will call it a run after eleven months on Broadway.

Two at this writing are the shows coming to town the week beyond this. That new "Artists and Models"—which, in an effort to distinguish it from all the other "Artists and Models" you may or may not have seen, is billed as the "Paris Edition of 1930"—is scheduled to arrive at the Majestic on the 9th, while Mr. Cohan is performing "The Song and Dance Man" at the Fulton.

And now for a word or two about the revue called "Corned Beef and Roses," which will have Fannie Brice, wife of its sponsor, in it. For the first act finale Miss Brice is preparing to sing, of all things, a new version of "Frankie and Johnnie," and there is a possibility that James Barton, now recovering from a long illness, will be on hand to assist her here and there in the proceedings. Mr. Barton is under contract to the Shuberts, but he may be released for Mr. Rose's extravaganza. As printed, the revue will have a number of sketches by David Freedman and J. P. McEvoy, and songs by Rodgers and Hart and Harry Warren. And then Jed Harris, who got in from a brief trip abroad last week on the Europa, may be interested in staging all or a part of the show.

According to Horace Liveright, only two members of the cast of "Frankenstein" will be English. One of them, as printed, will be Lyn Harding. . . . There are reports—and they are reports you are privileged to believe or to disbelieve—that the name of a forthcoming play has been changed from "Jungle" to "Jungle Love" because of the protests of Upton Sinclair, who wrote the novel called "The Jungle." Agnes Ayres, once a considerable luminary of the films, and Herbert Rawlinson will be in "Jungle Love," along with, in the interests of atmosphere, several authentic elephants, leopards and monkeys.

They say that, what with one thing and another, Mr. Gershwin will probably not be able to provide the score for the musical show called "The Big Charade" and that the assignment may fall to Irving Berlin. Herbert Fields, whose task it will be to supply the libretto, is still in Hollywood, and there he will remain until August.

A Coast production of "The Last Mile" is scheduled to open in Los Angeles this week. Clark Gable, recently Alice Brady's vis-à-vis in the play called "Love, Honor and Betray," will have the leading rôle, to be taken over tomorrow in Forty-second Street by Lawrence Leslie.

THE FIRST MRS. GUITRY WRITES, TOO

PARIS, May 14.

ALTHOUGH Charlotte Lysès, whose first play has just been produced, has waited a number of years before presenting herself to the public as an author, she is not only well known as an actress, but she may take some credit for the fact that she certainly had an indirect, and perhaps even a certain direct, share in the writing of several successful comedies. For she was the wife of Sacha Guitry in the days when he was known as the enfant terrible of the French theatre and when he did some of his most delightful work. At that time Sacha, it appears, was a very indolent young fellow. Like the journalist, O. P. Pym, in one of Barrie's books, he would lie abed in the morning, "suffering from a disease which has afflicted many men since the beginning of the world—acute disinclination to work." Charlotte Lysès used to persuade him to get up, used to persuade him to go into his study and used to place his pen in his hand. Then he wrote, and afterward he achieved success, and when he had achieved success he met Yvonne Printemps, and divorce separated him from the lady who put the pen in his hand.

She has now taken it into her own. Her piece is called "Coucou," and by no means gives the impression of being the work of a beginner. Indeed, like many plays written by actors, it betrays rather too complete a knowledge of the tricks of the trade. However, it also has wit, and the characters are something more than mere theatrical automata. It should please.

Coucou is a modern girl. Her father and mother are rich, and want her to make a good marriage; but she has rejected all the eligible young men who have been proposed to her or have proposed themselves, and has insisted on adopting the profession of an "avocate"—for women in France, although they have no votes, can become barristers. We see her dismissing the latest of the aspirants to her hand, who manages, complacently but without much authority, to say exactly the sort of thing which annoys her—that the duty of a wife is to obey her husband, and so forth. She quarrels with her father, and decides to live a bachelor life.

When the curtain rises on the second act, we are surprised to see her dressed as a bride; but it is only a mock wedding. The friends and the champagne and the songs and the dances are all part of the bachelor life. There is a bridegroom, however, and although the ceremony will not be binding, Coucou has decided to say good-bye to her girlhood. She even loves the mock bridegroom, or at least she thinks she does.

At the beginning of the third act is another surprise. Coucou is married, really married; but her husband is not the handsome young man of the second act. He is the rejected suitor of the first. How she was quickly cured of her infatuation for the more dashing gentleman, who merely wanted to number her among his many conquests, Coucou relates to a friend, and she also tells how, at the proper moment of despair, the faithful admirer turned up to save her. It all ends very morally and traditionally. Every one is happy in proper connubial harness, even Coucou's father and mother, who have quarreled all their lives, and who supply many of the most amusing lines of the play.

Alice Cocéa, who made her name in "Phi-Phi," but who has become a very accomplished light comedy actress since those days of operette, is Coucou, and does full justice to the part, while Charlotte Lysès makes the most of the part of the mother, which she has modestly allotted to herself.

THE DRAMA TO BRIGHTON

After Twenty Years the Acrobats Make Way for the "Legitimate" Theatre

THOUGH the Broadway managers are known to thank their stars and sometimes pay them when the Fall arrives and the dolorous Summer has vanished, the Great Street's darkness is the seashore's light. June begins the sad session in Times Square, but it starts a season of rejoicing at, for instance, such places as Brighton Beach, where are the boardwalk, hot dogs, cold drinks, shore dinners, rolling chairs—and Summer theatricals.

To house that portion of the Summer theatricals belonging to vaudeville there has been for over twenty years the New Brighton Theatre, with a long, honorable record of acrobats, magicians and rathskeller acts. But, having held rigidly to a vaudeville policy since its construction, the Brighton will go legitimate tomorrow night with, as its first attraction, the Moss Hart-George S. Kaufman play, "Once in a Lifetime," fresh from that other resort called Atlantic City. Things are looking up down Coney Island way.

More than a quarter of a century has elapsed since regular attractions last appeared in that section of the New York ocean front back in the halycon days of Manhattan Beach, when De Wolf Hopper, Frank Daniels and other musical comedy favorites played seasonal engagements at the old Manhattan Beach Theatre. And, although the Brighton Theatre has until now presented only vaudeville, its construction was the result of a desire to bring legitimate shows to Ocean Parkway.

The playhouse, which is of Moroccoan architecture, was completed and opened in 1909, but not without considerable opposition from unexpected quarters. There were even those who frowned and hinted at foul play. It seems that the old Brighton Beach Hall, which obtained its vaudeville program from the same source, the United Booking Office, was controlled by the Brooklyn Rapid Transit interests, and that the railroad showed its practical pique by refusing to stop trains at the Ocean Parkway station. The customers could bellow as they would, but the railroad held firm, and without proper transit facilities the prospects for the newer enterprise were none too bright.

But there was still another obstacle in the theatre's pathway to success, and those who followed the case were quick to see that the railroad company was again playing the heavy rôle. When the trains reached the station preceding Ocean Parkway the guards would shout, "Get off here for the Brighton Music Hall!" Platform men equipped with megaphones would announce the virtues of the older theatre's vaudeville, and the newer Brighton's prospective but fickle customers would be lured away to the opposition.

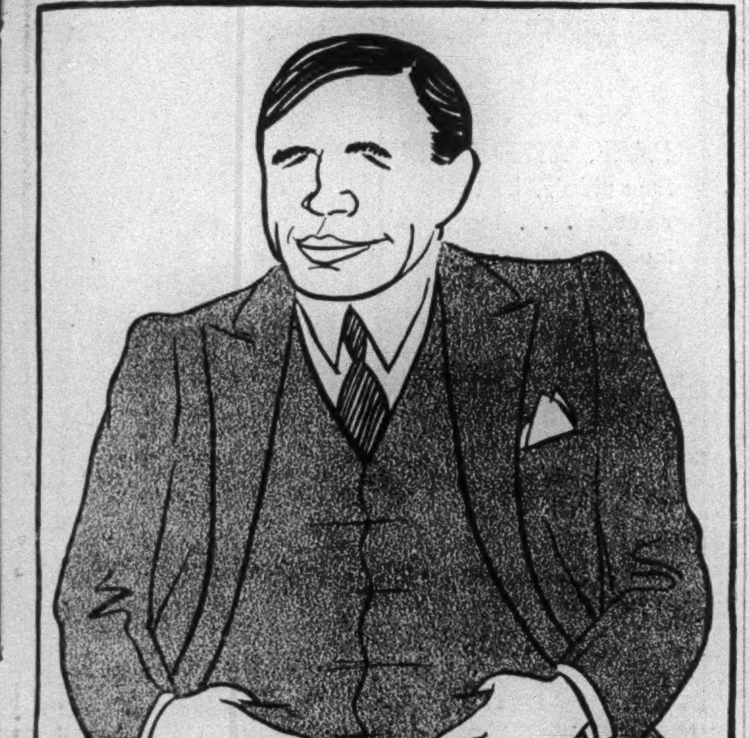
The Brighton has the shortest active period of any theatre in Greater New York, being operated only in Summer months. The seasons have averaged about sixteen weeks, never beginning before the middle of May and terminating usually about Labor Day. However, these brief seasons have been long enough to head many a well-known star in the direction of Broadway, and not a few present-day celebrities owe their start to a week in Brighton.

To be precise, there was the young blackface comedian who came out of the Western circuits and the minstrel semi-circles to try his luck as a vaudeville single. Princess Rajah, an Oriental dancer, chanced to be on the bill, and the young burnt-cork comic burlesqued the Princess's gyrations with such amusing results that he was held over for a second week. The comedian's name was and is Jolson, and his non-Warner Brothers salary was $250.

Then there were the Ponzillo Sisters, Carmella and Rosa, two Italian songbirds from Meriden, Conn., who discovered their names in electric lights over the Brighton's portals and were duly thrilled until Elsie Janis's mother protested. Miss Janis was the week's headliner and it was in her contract that she alone was to have her name in incandescent display. A season or so afterward the very same Rosa had taken her voice up to the Metropolitan Opera House. Fred and Adele Astaire, plucked from the minor circuits, appeared at Brighton early in their careers, while Will Rogers and his horse used to close the show, with Rogers sticking to his tricks and remaining silent to the point of moroseness.

Time has worked changes with all of them, including Mr. Rogers's horse, and the theatre itself has been altered. Its sea-green walls are newly painted now and the ornamental mermaids that grace the stage boxes sport freshly gilded suntans.

The new dignity, they call it at Brighton Beach.



Back Again Comes Leo Donnelly, This Time in "Spook House," Due for a Showing on Tuesday Evening at the Vanderbilt.

MANHATTAN VAUDEVILLE

PALACE—Out of the late "International Revue," and right into this receptive basilica, come Frances Williams, Jans and Whalen and the tenor Radaelli. Willie and Eugene Howard give the bill a fourth headline act, and all in all it's quite an alumni gathering. York and King remain for a second week. Others are Carr Lynn, the Robbins Trio, Deno and Rochelle and the On Wah troupe ("Elastic Celestials").

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET—Harry Holmes is that fellow who makes comedy with a phosphorous skeleton, and that will remain the principal diversion until the midweek change. Then there will be Margaret Schilling, the soprano, and Roy and Mae, who dance.

HIPPODROME—From now until Saturday: Dave Harris's "Varieties," Naughton and Gold, Helen Justa and Charlie, the two Daveys, the Libby dancers, and Marinoff's Russian canine actors, which could be an animal act.

LOEW'S STATE—Barto and Mann, who used to dance for Earl Carroll, combine with Jack Pepper to top the week's entertainment.

FIFTY-EIGHTH STREET—In an act that is better than most of its kind, Rin Tin Tin is the star at this house during the early part of the week. The tireless burlesquer, Joe Marks, will come along later for a three-day engagement.

EIGHTY-SIXTH STREET—Sally O'Neil and Molly O'Day, who are sisters under the klieg lights, lead a bill which also has Val and Ernie Stanton in some affable comedy. Healy and Cross, almost certainly singing "Cryin' for the Carolines," will open on Wednesday.

PUPPETS VISIT FILMLAND

Punch and Judy Have a Theatre of Their Own in Hollywood, Delighting the Colony

PUNCH AND JUDY never were illustrious homemakers. So it is not surprising that the peregrinations of their sophisticated offspring bring them, triumphant, into Hollywood.

Harry Burnett, formerly of the Yale University Theatre, and his two co-workers, Forman Brown, author, and Richard Brandon, business manager, are conducting a puppet theatre in Hollywood to the immense delight of the film colony. But who ever heard of Punch not bringing joy to his audiences? It is not by chance that the same marionettes who entertained Cleopatra, today are throwing into spasms of mirth the children in Luxembourg gardens and the actors and actresses in California. It is because Punch—years ago—mastered the art of being amusing.

The Club Guignol, established by these three boys just out of college, has captured the fancy of Hollywood as well as advanced a step the art of puppetry. As one Los Angeles man-about-town writes, "When you have danced yourself to death, seen every show in town and played bridge until you're trumping your partner's ace, our suggestion is—try the Club Guignol. This is not a night club as the name sounds. It is a puppet show. The organization presents an entirely new revue each Saturday and Sunday at 9 P. M. and matinees the same days at 3 P. M. for children."

Puppets of Celebrities.

It is thus that the workshop and home of the three tireless puppeteers becomes a marionette theatre on these days, seating an audience of about twenty-five. Programs are varied, but the section for which the audience waits eagerly is the "Revue Intime" presenting "in person" such celebrities as George Arliss, Colleen Moore, Gloria Swanson, Jetta Goudal and Ramon Novarro.

In his best Disraeli fashion, the tiny portrait puppet of Mr. Arliss walks upon the stage and becomes master of ceremonies in this miniature Grand Street Follies of fun and melody. The appearance and action of the puppet often reminds one of the man who came so far up among the stars from Bloomsbury. The audience is convulsed when the little Disraeli adjusts his monocle and continues his mimicry.

Ruth Chatterton's diminutive double floats on to the stage in long, form-fitting gown of black, and soulfully sings this song:

"I'm the doctor's secret, and I'm Madame X.
And I'm a charming sinner of the tantalizing sex.
Now if you don't know me, this might scandalize you, but
My sins are such refined ones that
I'm positive they'll not.
They have a Mayfair accent, correct and scintillating;
The butler's never far away; the town car's always waiting;
With bishops always in for tea and baronets for dinner,
It's quite endurable, you see, to be a charming sinner."

Ramon Novarro in bold pagan costume does his turn on the peripatetic stage, and Colleen Moore executes her dance steps to the delight of none so much as the real Miss Moore who, after the show, is found back stage trying to make the new Colleen dance by manipulating strings. (At a private performance given in her home recently, Miss Moore insisted on being back stage and reading the lines for her puppet, adding much to the illusion.)

Perhaps next week small duplicates of Ralph Forbes, Esther Ralston, Elsie Janis, Gary Cooper with his two wild mustangs or Aimee Semple McPherson in white pulpit attire, Bible, cape et al., will appear. Now they hang inert and lifeless in their calico bags back stage.

But this hour of fun for the audience means infinite work for the three puppeteers. Mr. Burnett makes all the puppets as well as stage settings, properties and certain animals, prehistoric and otherwise. He studied his technique intensively with George Pierce Baker at Yale University and later in the historic marionette theatres of Europe. For more than eight years he has labored assiduously to perfect his small actors. With puppets, stage and puppeteers snugly packed in a motor truck, these three boys have given puppet shows in almost every State, from the Summer colonies at Bar Harbor, Me., and Newport, R. I., to the mountain towns of Carolina and hence across the country to Hollywood in the ambulatory style only Punch would approve.

As a result Mr. Burnett has a large repertoire. One Summer he traveled in New England with his company of six carrying a pretentious production of "Bluebeard" with costumes and stage setting by Norman Bel Geddes, designer for that play, "The Miracle." "Bluebeard," in five scenes, was written in Gilbertian style by Dorcas Ruthenberg of the Yale 47 Workshop. It is based upon the familiar Arabian Nights legend of Ariane and her troublesome spouse.

Musical Dolls.

Charming incidental music for "Bluebeard," "Hansel and Gretel" and other of Mr. Burnett's productions was written by Mr. Brown. Mostly from his spirited imagination came the recent musical comedy, "My Man Friday," with its chorus of nine dusky beauties dancing in conventional chorus girl style through the dexterous manipulation of the three puppeteers. Mr. Brown is also invaluable for his rendition of soprano solos and other feminine parts. He sings second soprano or contralto, "Depending," he says, "upon the weather conditions."

The solo dancer demands 179 strings for her part. Crusoe starts playing his saxophone, and the modern comedy is on at top-notch pace.

Mr. Burnett has received much praise for the ingenuousness of his musical puppets, his Haydn trio, a symphony orchestra of fourteen pieces, a harpist and a pianist. At a certain performance, the symphony was playing "The Blue Danube Waltz" assisted by a victrola recording made by Walter Damrosch. Some one in the audience cried out, "Faster! Faster!" whereupon the small conductor speeded up his tempo. The finish brought forth much applause and "Bravo!" from the kind intruder, who was none other than Mr. Damrosch himself.

Thus the family of Punch and Judy frolic on to the delight of none so much as their immortal selves.

"WHOOPEE" FOR THE SCREEN

By LYNN FARNOL.

SITTING side by side on their canvas-backed folding chairs, Samuel Goldywn and Florenz Ziegfeld will watch their first joint production, "Whoopee," with Eddie Cantor as its star, go into its seventh week of production tomorrow morning on Goldwyn's 120-foot sound stages in Hollywood.

Mr. Ziegfeld has been in constant attendance on Goldwyn through the making of the picture. His genius for color, for stage movement, for spectacle and the staging for ensemble numbers has brought to the Goldwyn staff a constant stream of tremendously valuable suggestions. Being the first picture in which Ziegfeld has personally had a hand, he has seen to it that his handiwork be recognizable.

Eddie Cantor, too, has his family with him. The goggle-eyed comic, accustomed to play four or five benefit or charity performances every week that he is on Broadway, is finding himself with so much time free that he doesn't know what to do with himself.

This he advances as the reason for his presence at the studio morning, noon and night.

Some of the Stage Folk.

Ethel Shutta, George Olsen and his band, Chief Caupolican, Paul Gregory, John Rutherford, Spencer Charters and Marilyn Morgan of the cast that played for a year and a half at the New Amsterdam Theatre are working with Cantor in the screening of "Whoopee," which must make the work something like a continuation of the stage run.

Especially so, since Samuel Goldwyn's staff includes a number of Ziegfeld technicians.

Color is to receive special consideration in the picture in the shooting of exteriors. Mr. Cantor and the principals have already made shots "on location" at Palm Springs and in the Sequoia National Park. Arthur Hornblow Jr. is now making an aeroplane inspection at the last minute of sites in New Mexico and Arizona, with the probability that the "Invocation to the Gods" sequence will be filmed either in the Zion National Park or the Grand Canyon.

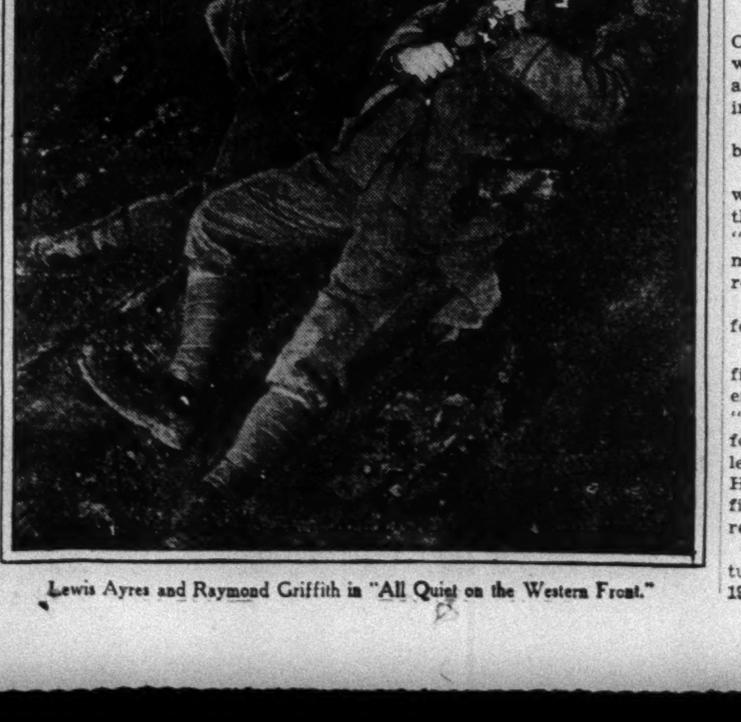
Eleanor Hunt, who was a chorus girl in the stage production of "Whoopie" has become Eddie Cantor's leading woman in its translation to the audible screen.

Fourteen of Ziegfeld's showgirls were sent to Hollywood for the ensembles.

Probably four more weeks will elapse before the picture is finished. The cost, originally budgeted at $1,500,000, will more than likely reach the two-million mark. Seventy-four scenic changes are required, and 512 costumes. In the picturing of one scene, the principals, dancing chorus, ensemble and technicians numbered 390 people.

Mr. Goldwyn plans to release the picture in New York and the principal cities of the country in a simultaneous showing. Sept. 1 is the most likely date.

Both Mr. Goldwyn and Mr. Cantor insist that there will be no personal appearance of the star at any showing of the picture. As Mr. Cantor reported a few weeks ago, he hopes that "Whoopee" will be so good that no personal appearance is required.



Lewis Ayres and Raymond Griffith in "All Quiet on the Western Front."

Alexander Gray and Bernice Claire in "Song of the Flame."

UNITED ARTISTS PICTURES

Twenty-One Films to Be Produced During the Season, With a Number of New Stars

TWENTY-ONE United Artists Pictures will be released during the film season that begins in August. Al Jolson, Eddie Cantor, Walter Huston, Evelyn Laye and Joan Bennett become United Artists stars this season.

Florenz Ziegfeld, Arthur Hammerstein, Irving Berlin and DeSylva, Brown and Henderson join the organization as producers of pictures, Mr. Ziegfeld having made his arrangement with Samuel Goldwyn, the other gentlemen with Joseph M. Schenck. Mr. Schenck is responsible for Rudolf Friml, Irving Berlin and DeSylva, Brown and Henderson composing songs directly for his productions, while Mr. Goldwyn has Bruno Granichstaedten and Nacio Herb Brown under contract to compose for the first Evelyn Laye film. Frederick Lonsdale, Louis Bromfield and Sidney Howard are writing stories of Samuel Goldwyn Productions, while Stephen Vincent Benet and William Anthony McGuire are working similarly on Mr. Schenck's productions. Ten of the twenty-one United Artists Pictures are financed by Mr. Schenck, four by Mr. Goldwyn; two are Gloria Swanson productions; Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, Howard Hughes and Walter Camp each expected to contribute one picture. All United Artists Pictures are made by independent film-makers who release pictures through that company.

The Plays.

Personalities concerned in the making of these twenty-one films include Mary Pickford, Norma Talmadge, Gloria Swanson, Dolores Del Rio, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, Al Jolson, Ronald Colman, Eddie Cantor, Walter Huston, Evelyn Laye, Joan Bennett, Lily Damita, Chester Morris, Bebe Daniels, Jeanette MacDonald, Lew Cody, Kenneth MacKenna, Joe E. Brown, Kay Francis, Una Merkel, Conrad Nagel, William Farnum, Nance O'Neill, Allison Skipworth, Eleanor Hunt, Ethel Shutta, John Garrick, Robert Chisholm, Ben Lyon, Virginia Cherrill, Ian MacLaren, Owen Moore, Louis Wolheim, Roland West, Henry King, D. W. Griffith, George Fitzmaurice, Alan Dwan, Marshall Neilan, Paul Stein, Thornton Freeland, Sam Taylor, John W. Considine Jr. and Benjamin Glazer.

Among the films are:

"What a Widow!"—Gloria Swanson in a romantic comedy story by Josephine Lovett, who wrote "Dancing Daughters," under direction of Alan Dwan, who directed "Robin Hood" and "Manhandled.' In the cast are Lew Cody, Owen Moore and Margaret Livingston. Miss Swanson sings three new songs by Vincent Youmans, but the film is not a revue nor a musical comedy. It is scheduled for release July 5.

"Raffles"—Ronald Colman in Samuel Goldwyn's production of the E. W. Hornung tale made famous in the novel and on the stage. Kay Francis is leadiny lady, Sidney Howard scenarist, and Frances Dade, David Torrence and Allison Skipworth are in the cast, under direction of George Fitzmaurice. July 26 is the release date.

"Lottery Bride," Arthur Hammerstein's first film, with Jeanette MacDonald, Joe E. Brown, Robert Chisholm and John Garrick acting out Herbert Stothart's original story and singing new songs especially composed for the film by Rudolf Friml. Part of the film is in technicolor. Aug. 16 is the release date.

"Whoopee"—Eddie Cantor in the first Samuel Goldwyn-Florenz Ziegfeld film, an all-Technicolor picture. Sept. 7 is the release date.

Griffith's "Lincoln."

"Abraham Lincoln"—Walter Huston has the title rôle in D. W. Griffith's talking dramatization of the life of the emancipator. Una Merkel, who played the awkward girl in "Coquette" on the New York stage, heads the supporting cast. Stephen Vincent Benet, Pulitzer prize winning poet (with his "John Brown's Body"), went to Hollywood to write the story and the dialogue. Sept. 28 is the release date.

"Eyes of the World"—Henry King is filming the Harold Bell Wright story. Una Merkel, Nance O'Neill, John Holland and Fern Andra head the cast. Oct. 18 is the release date.

"DuBarry: Woman of Passion"—Norma Talmadge appears as Du Barry, in her second talking picture. Sam Taylor is directing the film, based on the David Belasco stage play. Conrad Nagel, William Farnum, Hobart Bosworth, Ullrich Haupt, Allison Skipworth and Cissy Fitzgerald are in the cast. The film will be released Nov. 8.

"Forever Yours"—Mary Pickford is making a romantic story, adapted by Benjamin Glazer from the play by Rudolf Besier and May Edgington, with Marshall Neilan directing. Kenneth MacKenna, Don Alvarado and Ian MacLaren head the supporting cast. Nov. 29, is the release date.

"Whispers"—Roland West here directs Chester Morris for the first time since "Alibi." Release date Dec. 20.

Ronald Colman will follow "Raffles" with a second starring vehicle for Samuel Goldwyn, the story of which was just completed by Frederick Lonsdale. This film is to be released Jan. 10.

Evelyn Laye, the English musical comedy star of "Bitter Sweet," will make her American film debut in a Goldwyn production for which Louis Bromfield and Sidney Howard, Pulitzer Prize winners, are writing an original story. The music for this film is to be composed by Bruno Granichstaedten, the Viennese composer and Nacio Herb Brown. The tentative title of the film is "Her Glorious Affair." It is scheduled for release Jan. 31, 1931.

"Reaching For The Moon"—Bebe Daniels has the principal role. Irving Berlin makes his debut as a film producer, having written the story besides composing eight new songs for it. It will be in Technicolor and is scheduled for release Feb. 21.

Other Productions.

Dolores Del Rio follows "The Bad One" with a second starring picture which is placed in a tropical country and in which she will do some singing. To be released March 14.

Gloria Swanson's second film will be released April 4.

DeSylva, Brown and Henderson, who turned out "Sunnyside Up" for the screen and "Good News" and "Follow Through" for the stage, will make a United Artists picture for release April 25.

"Smilin' Thru," Joan Bennett's feature production.

"City Lights," Charlie Chaplin's film, with music score and sound employed for specific comic effects, "sound gags" are used by Chaplin for the first time. Mr. Chaplin's new leading woman is Virginia Cherrill. Harry Myers is also in the cast. This film is nearly completed and will be released sometime in the Autumn.

Douglas Fairbanks will have a picture ready for release before Jan. 1, 1931, he announces.

HUMORIST TO DO FILMS

P. G. Wodehouse Goes to California to Have His First Try at Motion Picture Work

P. G. Wodehouse, who doesn't sign his stories Pelham Granville Wodehouse because he thinks these names are more suitable for a diplomat than a humorist, recently passed through New York on his way to the West Coast, where he will have his first try at motion picture work. Mr. Wodehouse was accompanied to the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio by his daughter, Leonora, who has scenario writing ambitions herself.

As round-faced and amiable in appearance as one of his own jovial fictional characters, Mr. Wodehouse did not allow his first siege of neuritis to affect his equanimity. Whether or not the neuritis had any connection with his renunciation of literature for the movies was not discussed. In any case, the fact that the writer was suffering twings of pain did not prevent him from smiling with cheery good humor.

"Motion-picture work is absolutely new to me," he said. "My first job will be to prepare an original screen comedy for Jack Buchanan, the stage star. I should like to continue to do original stories rather than adapt my earlier books or stories to the screen. Just now my thoughts are so colored by this neuritis complex that I am sure I should have my hero walking about with his arm in a sling. But perhaps I will feel differently when I am ready to begin work."

Mr. Wodehouse is a special admirer of George Arliss. Marion Davies is the author's favorite in the realm of light comedy, and while praising Miss Davies's work in "Not So Dumb," he expressed the hope that he might be able to do a story later on for this star.

Unlike those humorists whose spontaneous wit served to conceal a deep-rooted melancholy, Mr. Wodehouse is a thorough-going exponent of the philosophy expressed by his light-hearted comedy creations. He does not care for morbid books or plays and believes that the most valuable function of the dramatist and short-story writer is to entertain by artifice rather than by sombre realism and introspective study: to take people out of themselves, without worrying about missions, motives and object lessons.

"If I like California as well as I expect to," remarked the author, "I might stay a year—perhaps longer. I suppose that I shall be persuaded to get a house and car, and when one has those things there is an added inducement to remaining longer."

The English humorist's reputation in musical comedy circles dates back to his association with Guy Bolton and Jerome Kern, in the creation of such old-time favorite entertainments as "Oh, Boy!" "Oh, Lady, Lady!" and "Oh, My Dear!" Mr. Wodehouse's association with the stage also comprises the recent adaptation for English-speaking audiences of Molnar's "The Play's the Thing," "Her Cardboard Lover" and "Candle Light." He worked on the book of Ziegfeld's "Rosalie" and wrote the lyrics for "The Three Musketeers."

MR. ROGERS'S NEW COMEDY

"So This Is London" a Witty Production—Gifford Pinchot's South Sea Picture

By MORDAUNT HALL.

AFTER the fund of refreshing fun in Will Rogers's comedy, "So This Is London," based on George M. Cohan's stage production, it causes one to look forward with great pleasure to seeing this versatile comedian in his forthcoming productions, especially as one of them will be an audible picturization of Mark Twain's story, "A Connecticut Yankee at the Court of King Arthur." The other vehicle will be one entitled "See America First."

"A Connecticut Yankee at the Court of King Arthur" was one of the cleverest silent films of its day. In it Harry Myers, who will be seen some day in Chaplin's long-awaited comedy, "City Lights," performed in the title rôle. It is, however, one essentially suited to Mr. Rogers, and just as there were introduced in the mute offerings humorous stunts with flivvers and motorcycles, the producers may avail themselves in this new film venture of the radio, the television, the talking picture and the flying machine.

The Fox Film Corporation produced their silent picture of the Mark Twain story about the same time that "Over the Hill" was made. Although the latter picture was a far greater financial success than "A Connecticut Yankee at the Court of King Arthur," the Mark Twain fantasy was much the cleverer of the two productions, one in fact that was ahead of its day.

"So This Is London" has many clever lines in its dialogue and John Blystone, the director, has done splendid work in the arrangement of his scenes, which are gifted with no little originality. It was at first thought that this film would have to be dropped after one week at the Roxy, but finally it was decided to hold it over for a second week. If chuckling and laughing are any criterion of an audience's appreciation of a humorous production, then Mr. Rogers is a distinct success. It was also a picture that served as the topic of conversation in many quarters.

No funnier finish has ever been given to a film than that of this picture. It is an idea that caused the spectators to rock in their seats with laughter, for after having beheld a discussion as to where the American's son and the nobleman's daughter are to be married, the man from Texas and the man from Mayfair are seen and, what is most important, heard, singing to the same tune, "My Country, 'Tis of Thee" and "God Save the King," with such lines as "Land of my father's pride" and "Frustrate their knavish tricks" issuing forth simultaneously from the enthusiastic patriots.

It is a story that is quite simple, with lines and incidents rather than plot to recommend it. It skims along easily, taking things most of the time in quite a natural fashion. After the annoying experiences at the passport office, Hiram Draper (Mr. Rogers) and his wife, impersonated by the competent and personable Irene Rich, have a test of patience at the photographers and subsequently they are beheld victims of seasickness aboard the vessel bound for Britain's shores.

Mr. Draper, who is not inclined to roam from his own fireside, while suffering in a deck chair beside his wife cannot think of anything more inane than traveling to another country to see a lot of Englishmen, of whom his opinion is very low. He is pestered on the deck by a child who asks her nurse about Mr. Draper, and finally wants to know who painted his face green. By that time, Draper, certain that the child is English, musters up enough strength to say to the youngster:

"Say, listen. What part of England do you come from?"

To his discomfort, the child replies:

"Claremore, Oklahoma."

Then, among others, Draper has to bear with the pest who brags about the number of times he walks around the deck and the sick man wishes the pedestrian were on the straightaway. The man comes around again and hits Draper's foot with his cane, announcing as he does so that he has walked around fourteen times.

"Gabby old thing," observes Draper. "Got the foot and mouth disease."

It is not long after Draper is in London that he refers to the English as "marmalade hounds" and when he tries to find something to his taste on the hotel menu, he struggles with the French words and then vouchsafes to Mrs. Draper:

"The French may not have conquered the world, but they have made it tough for an ignorant guy to get something to eat."

Later, when in their suite, there is a knock on the door and Hiram declares that it is probably the ice water he ordered that morning.

Mr. and Mrs. Draper finally decide to spend a week-end at Lady Amy Ducksworth's, where Lord and Lady Worthing, the parents of Elinor, with whom Junior Draper has fallen in love, are to be guests also. Soon after their arrival at the imposing home Draper overhears mustachioed and bemonocled Lord Worthing voicing calumny against Americans. Therefore Draper and his wife decide to live up to the English Lord's weird conception of their compatriots by doing an Indian dance and uttering "whoopee" just before they make their entrance into the dining room.

In course of time Lord Worthing and Draper become quite friendly and they go pheasant shooting. Draper does not distinguish himself on the shoot, and in referring to this over a mug of beer and a whisky and soda Hiram spoofs the British Lord as follows:

"I really believe that England has the greatest diplomats and the rottenest coffee of any country in the world! You know the reason why I didn't hit many birds? We don't shoot like you people—did you ever figure that out? Now you Englishmen, you're sitting there and the birds come by, see—and when the birds come by you take up your glass (beer or whisky) and you set your glass down and pick up the gun and shoot. Now we shoot almost like you, but not exactly. When the birds come by we don't set our glass down—if we can't hit him left-handed, why we just let him go."

Mr. Rogers is inimitable in this rôle. Maureen O'Sullivan is charming as Elinor. Frank Albertson does capitally as Junior Draper and Lumsden Hare makes the most of the part of Lord Worthing.

A Charming Journey.

SOUTH SEAS," a splendid film made of the voyage of the Mary Pinchot by former Governor and Mrs. Gifford Pinchot and their son, Gifford Pinchot Jr., was at the Cameo last week. The various details are described by Mr. and Mrs. Pinchot and sometimes by Master Pinchot. It is a nicely worded talk in modulated tones which adds considerably to the interest of the production. The various experiences of the Pinchots in the Caribbean and, after passing through the Panama Canal, in the Pacific, are shown.

Mrs. Pinchot is a fearless woman. She is seen entering the cave of bats and later, equipped with a diving helmet, she descends to investigate a coral bed at the bottom of the sea. In the course of the voyage, a giant turtle was caught and brought back to this country. One of the thrilling bits of this film is where a native leaps with a harpoon in hand from a boat onto the slipper back of a giant sea bat, a fish that weighs more than a ton, and harpoons the monster.

The Pinchots saw plenty of sharks, and in one of the sequences it was said that it was a question whether the sharks or those with the rod got the fish. Remnants of fish are shown, the catch sometimes having been snatched off by a shark.

It is a beautifully photographed study, and the lecture is all the more pleasing for its modesty and Mrs. Pinchot's delightful diction.

Russia's "Iron Horse."

AN absorbing Russian silent film, known as "Turksib," a finely wrought account of the building of the Turkestan-Siberian Railroad, was presented at the Eighth Street Playhouse, where it is still holding forth. Without troubling about any actual romance, Viktor Turin, the director, spins the full story of the railroad, first by showing the terrain, then by depicting the construction work and amazed Mongolians who had not until that time even beheld an automobile, and finally by showing a train running over the tracks.

Possibly the most interesting stretch in this remarkable cinematic study is the idea of the natives hoping to outrun on their horses or even oxen a locomotive that is being tested. Although this is all staged, it is so splendidly done that it seems real. One believes in the amazement of the Mongolians and also that the other natives really think their steeds can go faster than the steam-spitting contrivance on wheels.

M. Turin shows one splendid map, on which by means of a mobile arrow he gives an idea of the task of the engineers in searching for the best place to go around a range of mountains.

There are some most interesting comparisons between the work of a pick and shovel and that of the monster steam shovels and dynamite.

M. Turin is clever in depicting the details of the work, in revealing the reactions of the ignorant populace and also in photography that gives an impressive idea of the head work of engineers in attacking such a task.

From Bad to Good.

BARBARA STANWYCK does some clever acting in a film called "Ladies of Leisure," which was at the Capitol. The story is somewhat trivial, a melodramatic, conventional affair, with the girl a gold-digger in one chapter and a whole-souled person willing to sacrifice her own happiness in a later one. Another splendid performance in this film is that of Lowell Sherman, who portrays a rascal, but succeeds in being far more interesting than Ralph Graves, the supposedly sympathetic young lover.

There is throughout this picture too much weeping of eyes and skies. If an excuse is wanted for any film heroine to stay in a man's abode, then the author calls for rain, and only in the time of Noah did it ever rain on earth as it does in so many motion pictures. During such a storm one is fairly certain to have to bear with the sobbing of the pseudo-heroine, and this case is no exception. Even with all the competent acting contributed by Miss Stanwyck, one begins to sigh when she cries. A little of this sort of thing in an audible picture goes a long way.

The film has little in the way of suspense, for, whether it involves noble conduct on the part of Jerry Strange or the melodramatic notion of having Kay Arnold (Miss Stanwyck) poised at the rail of a steamship in the Hudson River, one is quite sure that the young man will behave himself and that the girl will be rescued.

Miss Stanwyck goes through her part with admirable sincerity. Her efforts are too good for this type of narrative. Mr. Sherman really holds one's attention while he is on the screen. But all that can be said for Mr. Graves is that one can well understand why, as Jerry, he was a poor artist.

This picture was directed by Frank Capra, who gives some sterling touches to it, and it is reasonably certain that the lack of drama is not his fault, but probably due to the stereotyped story.

"THE FLORODORA GIRL"

THE first title chosen for "The Florodora Girl," the film in which Marion Davies now is appearing at the Capitol Theatre, was "The Gay Nineties." The present title, however, finally was determined upon, perhaps because it describes better the rôle played by Miss Davies herself.

In this photoplay, for which the final sequence was done in Technicolor, Miss Davies, as Daisy, has the rôle of a member of the original "Florodora" sextette, as it first was seen in New York in the old Casino Theatre in 1900.

The story was written by Gene Markey, who says that he always had had a particular interest in the period which Miss Davies had selected as the best background for her third talking film.

"The nineties were by far the most romantic of all periods in New York," Markey said the other day. "It seems to me that people lived better and enjoyed life more than ever before or since. Society was at its peak. Broadway was at its brightest.

"My father, somewhat of a blade himself in those days, supplied me with considerable material from which I drew my background. I also knew an old chap, a friend of the family, who knew Broadway backward and forward, and called all the 'Florodora' girls by their first names. I have talked to the lobster palace waiters, bartenders, race-track followers, wine salesmen and theatrical folk.

"Before I did the story for Miss Davies I had written several short stories of the 'gay nineties.' It had been a hobby with me for story material."

The Old and the New.

Harry Beaumont, who directed the picture, said that the original "Florodora" sextette wouldn't have been greatly in demand in motion pictures.

"The girls would be too clumsy for the camera," he explained. "The buxom type, popular then, would be considered ungraceful now. Also, the original sextette was composed of red-heads, and red hair means nothing to a camera. The camera prefers blondes.

"The red-heads in the original sextette, averaged five feet four inches in height and 130 pounds in weight. The girls in the present film sextette average five feet five inches in height and their average weight is 125 pounds. Besides Miss Davies the girls are Vivian Oakland, Lenore Bushman, Ethel Sykes, Patricia Caron and Ilka Chase, who is the only girl who is not a blonde and blue-eyed.

"The whole sextette weighed just 750 pounds," Mr. Beaumont concluded, "and a very few pounds increase in the total weight would have spoiled the fit of the costumes and the effect through the cameras."

The original "Florodora" sextette, it might be mentioned, including Margaret Walker, Vaughn Texsmith, Marie Wilson, Marjorie Relyea, Agnes Wayburn and Daisy Green. Susan Drake and Elaine Van Selover later took the places of the Misses Texsmith and Green, which has been the cause of some confusion since.

Lawrence Gray has the masculine lead in "The Florodora Girl," and the cast includes Jed Prouty, Walter Catlett, Claude Allister, Louis John Bartels, Sam Hardy, George Chandler and Zelda Sears.

Melville Brown is to direct Amos 'n' Andy, the radio blackface celebrities, in their forthcoming film.

PROJECTION JOTTINGS

Dueling Taught by Expert for Picture—Eisenstein's Probable Assistant

FOR the Warner Brothers' forthcoming pictorial version of "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," William Emile, a French fencing master, was engaged to teach Ernest Torrence and Walter Pidgeon how to slash, carve, pierce and brandish with swords.

M. Emile speaks with some authority on swords and swordplay. He tells one, for example, that after the clumsy tools of bronze used by the Persians, Greeks and Romans, the modern steel weapon was perfected by the Spaniards, introduced into Italy and France and thence to Germany, England and the Americas. During the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries rapiers were used for offense, while fighters utilized poniards, gauntlets or even cloaks for defense.

"These swords," M. Emile declares, "seldom less than four feet in length, tapered to the sharpest of points. A deadly wound resulted from contact. No less deadly was the dagger. It was used not only to parry sword strokes, but to supplement the sword attack as well. It served for the 'coup de grace.' After this nothing remained, presumably, but to ride furiously somewhere or other and wait for another affront or challenge.

"With the eighteenth century, which saw the shortening of the size of the sword and a lessening of its weight, the science of dueling really developed. The French school is superior to others. It calls for agility, grace and sensitiveness. Where a Hercules is required to make a successful Italian fencer, a woman may rise to eminence in the French school."

In "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," Claudia Dell is the flirt who wears her heart on her various sleeves, coquets, and brings about duel after duel among her admirers.

The Hon. Ivor Montagu, founder of the British Film Society who is in America studying the making of audible pictures, is reported to have been engaged as the assistant to Serge M. Eisenstein, the Soviet director, when the latter begins production on his first American film, which will be in a month or so. It is also said that Mrs. Montagu will serve as secretary for the Russian. Mr. Montagu produced the trilogy of H. G. Wells's short films in England and wrote the titles for "Turksib," the picture now at the Eighth Street Playhouse.

Views of the Ile de France leaving New York a week or so ago were photographed here for inserts in the film "What a Widow," in which Gloria Swanson acts the stellar part. William Dietz, an expert photographer, was sent to New York to take these scenes. This same camera man worked on the pictures of "Paris Bound," "Journey's End" and "Hell's Angels."

The Paramount studio in Astoria has three features being filmed at the same time besides four one-reel subjects.

The main pictures are "Animal Crackers," with the Four Marx Brothers, under the direction of Victor Heerman; "The Sap From Syracuse," with Jack Oakie, under the supervision of Edward Sutherland; and "Heads Up," a musical film in which Charles Rogers, Helen Kane, Victor Moore and Margaret Breen have leading rôles. Victor Schertzinger is directing. In addition to this program, preparatory work is nearing completion on the script and casting of "Laughter," in which Nancy Carroll will have the principal part, supported by Frederic March and Frank Morgan. The story is by H. D'Abbie D'Arrast, who will also direct it.

To balance the flow toward the West which so recently gripped the screen with a flood of cowboy dramas, First National will produce "Call of the East," in which Jack Whiting, a former Broadway player, and Irene Delroy will have the feature rôles.

Having settled whatever differences there may have existed between them, Jim Tully, the tramp writer, will have a rôle in John Gilbert's new film, "Way for a Sailor." Mr. Tully will not only be remembered as the author of "Jarnegan" and "Beggars of Life," but also for engaging in a fist fight with Mr. Gilbert.

The Fox studios are searching for a boy and girl to play the romantic leading rôles in "Just Imagine," the second Movietone production to be written by De Sylva, Brown and Henderson. El Brendel, Marjorie White and Frank Albertson are to have featured comedy rôles. The vacant parts are similar to those played by Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell.

SOME NEW FILMS

THE SWAN," the Ferenc Molnar play that was presented by Gilbert Miller at the Cort Theatre in New York in October, 1923, with a cast including Eva Le Gallienne, Basil Rathbone, Philip Merivale and Allison Skipworth, has come to the audible screen as Lillian Gish's first talking picture. It is known as "One Romantic Night."

Paul Stein, for four years a Max Reinhardt actor in Europe, a Viennese himself, directed this film.

A silent version of "The Swan" was produced in 1925. M. Menjou, with Ricardo Cortez and the present Mrs. Samuel Goldwyn, acted in it.

Marie Dressler has the rôle of Princess Beatrice in "One Romantic Night."

The rôle of Dr. Nicholas Agi, the tutor, acted on the stage by Basil Rathbone, is played in the film by Conrad Nagel. The name of the character has been changed to Dr. Nicholas Haller. Father Hyacinth becomes in the film Father Benedict. He is impersonated by O. P. Heggie. Rod La Rocque officiates on the screen as Prince Albert, a part played before the footlights by Philip Merivale.

SAFETY IN NUMBERS" is the feature attraction at the New York and Brooklyn Paramount Theatres in which Charles Rogers has the leading rôle. In this film he plays the part of a wealthy young man who leaves home in San Francisco to get an education in New York. His uncle places him under the chaperonage of four girls. They all fall in love with him. Katherine Crawford appears in the leading feminine part. There are musical as well as dancing interludes in this picture.

FANNIE HURST'S story "Back Pay," featuring Corinne Griffith, is on the screen of the Warners' Strand. Grant Withers, Montagu Love and Hallam Cooley have rôles in this story about a woman who prefers luxury to love, only to discover her mistake when it is too late. There are several sequences of the World War in this film.

THE Globe is offering "Midnight Mystery," with Betty Compson and Lowell Sherman. It is an adaptation of the play, "Hawk Island," and describes the adventures of an assorted set of house guests at a week-end party on the coast of Maine. Miss Compson plays the rôle of a sort of female Philo Vance. Others in the cast include Raymond Hatton, Hug Trevor, Rita La Roy, June Clyde, Ivan Lebedeff and William Burt.

AN English talking mystery film, "At the Villa Rose," is at the Cameo. In it Austin Trevor, Richard Cooper and Norah Baring have the main rôles. The story, by A. E. W. Mason, tells of the manoeuvres of Hanaud, the great French detective, and follows his actions in the episodes leading to the solution of the murder at the Villa Rose.

THE Fifty-fifth Street Playhouse is offering "The Wonderful Lies of Nina Petrova," a German silent film story concerned with pre-war St. Petersburg and the love of a young dancer for an impoverished Colonel. The film was produced by Erich Pommer, and Brigitte Helm figures in the leading feminine part.

SCREEN NOTES FROM LONDON

British Cherish Delusions Concerning the Fall of Hollywood and The Rise of Elstree—Obscure "English Film Alliance"

By ERNEST MARSHALL.

LONDON.

IT may be news to America that Hollywood is doomed, that its fame as the film centre of the world is destined to fade even more rapidly than it was won, that most of its studios will soon have to shut up shop, and that the palaces and sublimated "cottages" which have been erected in its environs by the millionaire film stars and directors and producers and others who have grown rich with the development of this American screen industry will erelong exhibit notice-boards proclaiming that they are for sale or to rent, as their present tenants have packed up their portable belongings and come to England in pursuit of fresh fame and new fortunes. All this may indeed be "news" to America, but there are some people on this side of the Atlantic who appear to be convinced that such dire prognostications are only an "intelligent anticipation of events"—which is what "news" has occasionally been described as being.

There is a well-known English writer who has made quite an enviable reputation in various literary a . journalistic fields. Not content with that, he has taken unto himself a pseudonym—"John Quill"—and it is under this alias that he ventures upon the prophecy that "England is going to become the world's film centre," and that the "Hollywood fetish" will die the death. It will, he admits, "die hard," and "it will require all the herculean efforts of the strong men of the film world to transfer the glamour and spurious prestige [of Hollywood] to an English centre; but it will be achieved, and thoroughly and soon, and it must inevitably redound to our [British] great and enduring advantage."

From the weak conclusion of this rhadamantine prediction, it may be permissible to infer that "John Quill" is indulging in a "pipe dream" rather than contemplating the hard realities of the film industry. It is none the less interesting to note the valorous efforts which are being made on this side of the Atlantic to bolster up the failing courage of the British producer. "John Quill" himself recognizes that Britain stands "with the ensign of her film credit tattered and grimed with the shot and smoke of battle, and held waveringly aloft by a handful of valiant producing companies which have survived the financial holocaust of the quota act. "Many combatants," it is added, "lie dead on the field, many more are dangerously wounded, and the pounds sterling which might prolong their lives for a while are not forthcoming."

A British Optimist.

But that is only the present position. "John Quill" foresees a different future—a glorious vision—with "British studios full, working day and night, new studios rearing themselves overnight, every available expert in any technical trade connected with production pressed into service; British players given a fair chance with adequate production and exploitation, new ideas tested, new production centres opened up, competition stimulated, enthusiasm aroused, muscles flexed, money circulating—Prosperity!"

And how is this transmogrification to be brought about? By no other means than by American capital!

It was recorded in this correspondence some time ago that the British film industry had received a staggering blow in the announcement that a number of the leading American companies were going to make pictures in England. "John Quill" and a few other enthusiasts appear to think that these "invaders" are actuated either by eleemosynary motives or are blindly putting their heads into the British lion's mouth. There can be no question of the fact that American production of films in this country will do something to thin the ranks of the British "unemployed" in the film business; but is there the least likelihood that American film magnates will do anything calculated to wreck Hollywood for the benefit of Elstree? Are the vested interests of Hollywood going to be sacrificed for the sake of an English accent? The half-dozen or so American companies which are reported to be considering the possibilities of England as one centre for the making of bi-lingual and multilingual have doubtless surveyed the whole ground more carefully than "John Quill" dreams of in his philosophy.

British producers generally cherish no delusions on this score. The many million dollars which Americans are expected to spend in developing their world market during the next two or three years will bring no grist to the British production mill. Here and there, of course, American expenditures will be to the benefit of the foreign countries in which they are placed, and individual actors and actresses and the rest of the army of workers connected with the film industry will extend a warm welcome to the dollars distributed in the process, but the British producer is by no means pleased to learn of this fresh competition in his own home market. Nor is the British investor as a rule confident that he will be putting his money out to the best advantage by ventures in a native industry which during the last few years has been suffering defeat after defeat from the transatlantic "invaders."

"Gloomy Dean" at Meeting.

At a meeting held at the Mansion House in London recently, with the Lord Mayor presiding, there were not more than sixty to seventy people present, although a strong appeal had been issued for support of the purposes of the gathering, which was to interest "the City" in the work of the British Empire Film Institute. Several patriotic speeches were delivered, and Dean Inge, the "gloomy dean" of St. Paul's Cathedral, moved a long resolution deploring the predominance of foreign films on the screens of the empire as injurious, and urging the encouragement of British film-making. It is not on record that "the City" did more than to exhibit sympathy.

With the capital at their disposal, it has to be admitted, British producers are making a good fight; but, according to the Napoleonic dictum, battles are won by big battalions, and the British companies which are able to put into the field forces comparable in either numbers or quality or equipment to the transatlantic invaders are not too numerous to mention. In fact, they could easily be counted on the fingers of one hand.

Great Expectations.

Big headlines have been given in some of the London papers to reports of "a great English film alliance" which is "to beat the world." Details are as yet somewhat obscure, and it is left to the imagination to determine how and why and wherefore Freddie Lonsdale, the dramatist, who is now on his way from Hollywood to London, should have engaged in telephonic negotiations from California to London with the Aldwych Theatre Company and British and Dominions Film Corporation, Ltd., for the purpose of forming a combine between the two aforesaid companies and Mr. Lonsdale. Has Mr. Lonsdale agreed to differ with the American producers at whose behest he went to Hollywood? Curiosity is keen on this point. Anyhow, it is announced that Mr. Lonsdale is already at work preparing his play "On Approval" for screen presentation; that the Aldwych Theatre Company will furnish such popular actors and actresses as Tom Walls, Miss Mary Brough and Mlle. Yvonne Arnaud to fill the rôles in this and other comedies by Mr. Lonsdale, and that work on the screen production will be begun at the Elstree studios of the British and Dominions Film Corporation in June. But how and why this arrangement should be a "world beater" has yet to be explained.

Another somewhat individualistic venture into film production is making progress in a British studio hired for the occasion. The venture is Miss Betty Balfour's. Miss Balfour made some money by her appearances in a series of films in which she usually played the rôle of a merry little romp with a tender heart. Most of her earnings she is expending on the making of a film under the direction of Louis Mercanton, whose title was at first announced as "The Brat," but which is now to be called "The Nipper," which is a Cockney equivalent of "kid." Miss Betty Balfour has multitudes of admirers, and she is certainly showing courage and confidence in her own ability to make "The Nipper" a paying proposition.

HOLLYWOOD HAPPENINGS

By RALPH FLINT.

HOLLYWOOD, Cal.

IT'S convention time in Hollywood. The annual getting together of executives and sales forces is under way, with all manner of pronouncements for the coming season. The R. K. O. forces, in session at the Roosevelt Hotel, are all agog over the report that they have secured the exclusive rights to the filming of George Bernard Shaw's repertory of plays; and the brave display of banners fluttering from the four corners of their studio lot is not without good reason. Paramount is in session at San Francisco with its Western representatives, following its big Eastern convention, while Fox gets into its yearly huddle next week, to end with a splendid banquet for Winfield Sheehan, to be staged by that indefatigable showman, Sid Grauman. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer sends out its big list of next year's winners, among which is included the long deferred "The Bugle Calls," started in Africa some two years ago under the auspices of Major Pechkof, step-son of the famous Gorki and hero of many stiff encounters of the Foreign Legion, and several times slated for Lon Chaney's use. With the successful audible films of "All Quiet on the Western Front" and "Journey's End," this would seem timely, particularly as authentic scenes of the Foreign Legion will be spliced in with others in this production.

The most interesting topic of conversation today in Hollywood screen circles is the foreign audible film situation. Opinion is well divided on the practicability of Hollywood making talking pictures in foreign languages, and yet, in the light of the increasingly cosmopolitan atmosphere and make-up of the world's leading screen community, it would seem to be the next move. Making pictures for overseas consumption in the leading languages is by no means an insurmountable task and today many of the studios are experimenting in this new department, a development that is proving a boon to many in the Hollywood screen colony who are linguistically equipped. Paramount is on the point of taking this new bull by the horns with its projected Paris studio, to cost well toward a million dollars; and this company is busy at the moment making various foreign versions of its "Paramount on Parade," even to recasting it in Japanese. French and Spanish versions are under way, and it is planned to make a Swedish one as well, using various Berlitzian entertainers to act as masters of ceremony in introducing the various specialties, which must remain in the original English.

Foreign Language Versions.

In as elastically organized a thing as a screen revue almost anything can be slipped in in the way of skits and sketches in foreign tongues to bolster up the spirit of the film, but it will be a more difficult matter to produce dialogue pictures in other languages than English, at least for the present until regular companies are recruited for the purpose. Paramount has already completed "The Benson Murder Case" in Spanish and French, and Chevalier has done "The Big Pond" in French as well as in English at the Astoria studio. Menjou, back at his old stand, but for the present as a foreign-speaking star only, is making "L'Enigmatique Monsieur Parkes" in French and "Amor Audaz" in Spanish, the latter film with Rosita Moreno, who is at present doing numbers for the Spanish version of "Paramount on Parade."

Barry Norton, who is in reality an Argentinian, although to all intents and purposes just another good-looking leading man of Anglo-Saxon persuasion, is apparently destined for a season of Spanish pictures, for he, with Señorita Moreno, is heading the little group that is revamping Paramount's revue for the South American trade. Under the fiery direction of Señor Venturini, he is ambling in and out of Elsie Janis's "Parade" with a fine flow of modulated Spanish. The studio executives report that Spanish records magnificently. Little Mitzi Green, who did the "Black Crow" number in the original revue, was also on hand the day I watched these novel proceedings, prefacing her number with a scattering of "Si, si, señors," and whatever other small Spanish talk Señor Venturini had implanted in her clever little head. The Paramount forces are quite proud over these latest accomplishments in talking pictures, and claim that their company is the first to make a "short" in Esperanto, beyond which feat no one could expect them to go.

Paramount reports that "The Virginian," featuring Gary Cooper, is its best money maker of the past season, with "The Cocoanuts" second. This indicates that the "Western" picture is back to stay, and right and left the studios are getting out their old Wild West equipment and calling the almost vanished cowboy back to Hollywood. Colonel Tim McCoy, the well-known Indian expert, is at Universal City working on a series of "Westerns," and the ease with which the microphones can be operated out in the open today makes anything almost possible in outdoor subjects. R. K. O. announces a new microphone, known as the RKO Beam, that takes its name from certain directorial and selective qualities which make it possible to bring sound to a focus for recording. This enables extraneous noises to be reduced to a minimum by the hypothetical casting of a beam in which certain sounds are picked up to the exclusion of all other sounds not originating within the beam. Recent tests, made under the grueling conditions of a railroad yard in full operation, revealed that dialogue can be recorded at a distance of thirty-five feet without being interrupted by the noise of passing trains.

New German Favorite.

Another arrival on the Paramount lot who will be watched with interest from a linguistic point of view is Marleen Dietrich, the German star, who has recently completed "The Blue Angel" with Emil Jannings in Germany, under the direction of Josef von Sternberg. She is a most striking looking young woman, combining many of the visual qualities of Greta Garbo and the late Jeanne Eagels, and she was the centre of interest as she roamed the studio the other day with von Sternberg, whose latest hobby is to be seen everywhere armed with a hand camera. Nothing could be more indicative of the extraordinary ups-and-downs of the Hollywood racket than this man's meteoric rise. Today he is one of Paramount's most successful directors, and yet he came to this company with a list of failures and unhappy film experiments to his credit that would have spelled a conclusive finish to most any other.

Howard Hughes's Costly Film.

Undoubtedly the man of the moment in Hollywood is Howard Hughes, whose $4,000,000 "Hell's Angels" is slated for its world première within a week. This young producer, who has been steadily at work on his war epic for upward of three years, regardless of expense, delay or disaster, has determined on a première which he expects will startle the motion picture colony to its very depths. Sid Grauman has been entrusted with the grand opening, and he has made plans for a most gala affair. Eleven dollars a seat is being asked for this première, a scale of prices that only New York has hitherto indulged in, and the surrounding sky is to be kept alive with a fleet of planes charged to the gunwales with colored bombs. No one, save Mr. Hughes and a trusty henchman or two, has yet seen "Hell's Angels" in its entirety. No, not even Sid Grauman; and the utmost secrecy and suspense prevail. During recent midnight previews at the Chinese Theatre, Mr. Hughes has sat in lonely state as his costly film has been unfolded to him. Hand torches have sprayed the dark recesses between the aisles in order that no "peeping Tom" may carry advance reports to a waiting world.

AT THE RIALTO

Claudette Colbert and Maurice Chevalier in "The Big Pond."

A DIRECTOR ABROAD

RICHARD WALLACE, director of "Shopworn Angel" and "Seven Days' Leave," has spent four months in China, Japan and Egypt "watching" people, becoming steeped in Egyptology and noting customs in the Oriental theatre. He returned to New York last week and hurried on to the Coast, where he will resume directorial duties after what he terms his "mental turnover."

By "watching" people he meant literally that. He stood four days at the Wailing Wall in Palestine noting people and remarking their mannerisms. He traced the culture of the ancients and their progression by the relics found in the Valley of Thebes. He came "smack up against" the tomb of Tut-ankh-Amen and the wonder and mystery surrounding the hastily buried King whose remains stir superstition and fear in the heads of even present-day natives.

In Palestine Mr. Wallace held extended conversations with some of the inhabitants, particularly about talking pictures. He said some old Jews told him that Chaplin's "Gold Rush" typified Israel's struggle.

In China he visited a theatre at which the second greatest female impersonator was giving a performance. Mei Lan-fang was in New York at the time. When the actor, dressed as a woman, came on the stage he was supposed to be a girl waiting for "her" sweetheart. In the meantime "she" picked up some brushes and a screen and proceeded to paint a picture. This took twenty minutes, during which time nobody in the theatre stirred and there was no further action in the scene.

38 Shows Under One Roof.

In Shanghai he found the "New World," a place where upon payment of the equivalent of forty cents one could enjoy the performances of thirty-eight companies presenting amusements ranging from vaudeville to drama.

Chinese take the day off to go to the theatre or the motion picture, Mr. Wallace said. Performances run from 3 in the afternoon until 11 at night. There are moments during this time when the law requires that the theatre be emptied for ventilation. At these interludes every one rushes to the restaurants for refreshments. In the Paramount Theatre at Shanghai there are five restaurants.

Of the three motion picture studios he visited in Japan he found that they were all making the feudal or old style drama and that their studios were almost as well equipped as ours, although not for sound. He said that they had acquired the German technique in photography and direction. In China, too, he found the equipment quite modern, but the stories were still concerned with folklore. There will be no shortage in story material in these countries, he declared, for a director can go out to the corner, give a beggar two cents and have him recite one of the old legends, which serves as a basis for a scenario. There are countless thousands of these legends. A motion picture could be made every twenty minutes in China, Mr. Wallace said.

Chevalier Popular Everywhere

The most popular film star in the countries he visited proved to be M. Chevalier, who, he added, considering his first appearance in pictures, was a phenomenal success and universally understood and liked.

In Cairo Mr. Wallace's film "The Shopworn Angel" was being shown at a theatre with subtitles in English, French, Arabic and Greek. The first two languages were projected on the screen, while the Arabic and Greek were thrown on the wall alongside the film.

Mr. Wallace has no preference in the choice of story material. "We all go along with the trend," he said. "In fact, it is not good to set such laws for one's self, one too often sticks in a rut."

His next film will be seen shortly. It is the second picture with the blackface comedians Moran and Mack, called "Anybody's War."

"I like this film," the director said, "because it has dogs in it."

Mr. Wallace had his early screen training on the proving grounds of the Mack Sennett studio. He believes that training in making comedies teaches one to "deliver" on time and also teaches concentrated effort.

At one time Mr. Wallace wanted to be a surgeon and enrolled at the Rush Medical College at Chicago. But circumstances forced him to abandon this idea and he became an assistant to a Chicago undertaker. Later he was one of the partners of a traveling motion picture show. Then he worked as a film cutter, a director and a writer. He was in the signal corps during the war and upon his return wrote scenarios for the Fox Film Corporation.

He almost bought a genuine scarab in Cairo for $500 that was said to have come from Tut's tomb. Now he is sorry and is beginning to lay plans to go back and retrieve it some day.

THE DANCE: NEW STANDARDS

Modern Forms of the Art and Its Technique Make Appeal for Audiences That Maintain an Open Mind

By JOHN MARTIN.

WHAT are the standards by which one is to judge the work of the modern dancers? It is a question that has perplexed a considerable proportion of the new audience which has begun to grow up in New York during the last three seasons or so. Those who ask it are not alone the laymen who have been attracted by the general interest in the dance and who would sincerely like to find out where its value lies; they are also dancers and devotees of the old school.

A certain representative of this latter class, a well-known dancer of the traditional style, too busy with her own work to have time for concert going, became nevertheless deeply interested in the new popularity of the dance which she saw developing around her on all sides. When the Dance Repertory Theatre inaugurated its season with a joint program by four dancers whose names are frequently in the news, she hailed with delight the opportunity of going to the performance and seeing with her own eyes what she felt would be representative of the best in the new movement. As Martha Graham's portion of the program proceeded she became a bit nonplused; when Tamiris offered no more familiar landmarks as guides, her bewilderment increased, until with the conclusion of the evening by Doris Humphrey and Charles Weidman she confessed that she had not the slightest notion what they were all driving at.

Revolutionary Changes.

In the old dance there was a definite technique, and it was fundamentally the same no matter what variations were played upon it. There was, furthermore, a somewhat standardized esthetic approach to the dance, which had crystallized gradually and with such deadly steadiness that its condition was not recognized until something radical and revolutionary rose up challengingly to supply contrast. Now that the radical and revolutionary have constituted themselves the regular and general, the props have been swept away from under the old standards of judgment; and the onlooker who attempts to apply them to what he sees nowadays suffers the same shock that befell the perplexed dancer mentioned.

The one thing that the modern dance can be relied on not to possess is a fixed standard of any sort. Every dancer is to some extent an inventor, an innovator, a pioneer. To be less is to have no justification for dancing in the modern scheme of things, for here it is individuality and a personal message that are at the heart of the conception of art. If this can be considered as a fixed standard, let him who will make the most of it.

The subject, however, is not to be dismissed as lightly as this, for it is of such a disturbing character to many visitors at dance performances, and even to some of the dancers themselves, that they are moved to write letters of inquiry to the professional reviewers not only for the simple asking of advice and counsel but even at times to demand a statement of the specific principles upon which certain opinions have been based.

Now to give a reason for an opinion is a simple matter in any particular case; but to be forced to consider such a reason as a precedent, to be observed in all future cases, is to court disaster and confusion. No set code, no confession of faith, no rule of measure could conceivably be devised that would be applicable to the diverse arts of, let us say, Maria Theresa and Angna Enters. Doris Humphrey and Agnes de Mille, Ruth St. Denis and Tamiris, Martha Graham and Edwin Strawbridge, Harald Kreutzberg and Sara Mildred Strauss. The list might be continued indefinitely without a glimmer of such hope.

Approval and the Artist.

Yet the plea for a single standard goes on with all the fervor of the Ibsen heroines of another day and cause. When the dancers themselves or members of the cohorts of their faithful followers voice the plea, it is generally about as follows: On such-and-such date Miss A (who is a highly gifted artist of wide experience and notable accomplishment) presented a composition with her group which was received with a certain degree of coldness from those who are critically minded. On this-or-that date immediately afterward, Miss B (who is a talented but inexperienced dancer taking her first bold steps into a new region of her art) presented a composition which any one must concede was of an inconsequential nature and yet she was more cordially applauded than Miss A. Where is the justice of such a situation?

As a matter of fact, the answer is quite simple. Miss A, by the excellence of the standard she has set herself, arouses certain expectations in the minds of her audiences before she shows her dances. When she falls short of these expectations and of the standard which causes them, she has done an inferior piece of work, and that ends it. It makes no difference how many times Miss B or Miss C are praised for their advance beyond their own former achievements, Miss A's dancing can only be compared with her own standards.

The Question of One Standard.

It is frequently suggested that one should take to all performances a code of his own and measure each artist by it, thus demanding a definite degree of excellence in every instance, and—in the case of the professional reviewer—providing a scale by which all performances could be compared on a common basis and in a sense given a percentage mark. This score-card system would prove a bit cut-and-dried even at best, but it has more formidable arguments against its adoption.

It would be a comparatively easy matter to draft a theoretical creed which one knew he would never be called upon to prove in practice. Ideals and abstractions flow glibly off the pen, and the average imagination can compass cloud-capped pinnacles which no human being could be expected to reach in the flesh. The higher the standards of the individual, the more dismal and desolate with failures would the dance become when measured against them in all their glittering generality. It is just such ideals that the individual dancer is pursuing in his performances; and that he fails to attain them none knows so well as himself. It is in the very nature of the arts that the ultimate can never be realized. Are we, then, stubbornly to demand satisfaction from a code that actually excludes it?

The question of deciding which one of the thousand and one single standards is to become the one officially recognized to the eternal extermination of all others would have to be settled by conclave—or, perhaps more likely, with shotguns. It recalls the well-known legend of the blind men who decided to find out what an elephant was like. One felt its ear, another its trunk, a third its leg, and so forth. When they got together to compare notes, it was a distinctly disorderly conference.

It is perhaps too much to expect the artist, who is creating with intensity in the medium in which he believes, to be able to see the equal validity of other mediums and to recognize the degree of progress that others are making in these mediums. A too open mind frequently denotes an artist without convictions, an imitator either consciously, or with that spongelike tendency that absorbs automatically everything that is going on, so to speak. Just as too narrow a vision leads to monotony and even obsession, so an overliberal viewpoint lacks character and muscle. A reasonable amount of partisanship seems a necessary concomitant of the artistic endowments which hold and convince an audience.

For those on the other side of the footlights, however, quite the reverse is true. There is no atom of justice in arbitrarily making up one's mind in advance what a dancer should be and then damning him for not being it, no matter how lofty and noble his work may be. Sometimes distinguished artists from overseas take an evening or two off from their own performances to visit those of American dancers, and come away with something less than commendation on their lips. It may be that they have dropped in to see not Miss A, Miss B or Miss C, but Miss X, Miss Y and Miss Z, who rank at the other end of the list; or it may be that the standards which they have taken with them into the theatre have no relation whatever to those of the dancers whose work they have been used to measure. It is for this reason that American dancers bridle quite pardonably when an occasional European visitor proceeds to wipe them off the map because they are not that which they would not be if they could, and which they make no pretense of being.

A Receptive Audience.

To be sure, one cannot avoid having his own standards, to a certain extent. The man who does not know anything about dancing, but knows what he likes, has at least some method of deciding what he likes. But it is the open mind that makes for the best audience. Without its cultivation the dance audience, constituted as at present to such a great extent of dancers and students of dancing, might rapidly become an aggregation of partisans. The memory is quite clear of one concert given by two artists several seasons ago, in which the house was evenly divided into two camps like rooters at a football game. When one artist was performing, his followers were raptly attentive while the other group chatted behind its hands; and the applause came with embarrassing regularity, according to the same lines of division, much to the discomfiture of the neutral observer.

There are, indeed, many things worse than the type of audience which knows only what it likes without stopping to worry why. Its lack of solemnity, its disregard of consistency, its freedom from theory offer useful hints to those who have not yet acquired the habit of taking their concert-going easily.

Hans Wiener and seven of his pupils have sailed for Europe to make a study of dancing in France, Belgium, Hungary, Austria and Germany. Other departures for Europe include Catherine Littlefield, première danseuse of the Philadelphia Grand Opera Company, and a group of the corps de ballet. They plan to return to Philadelphia at the end of September, when their rehearsals for the forthcoming season of opera there will commence.

SOVIET "CINEMA UNION"

AS was recently reported in a special dispatch from Moscow to THE NEW YORK TIMES, the eight divisions of the film industry in Russia, including the various State production companies, are being reorganized into a single concern called "The Cinema Union," under the direction of the Supreme Economic Council of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics. In the Moskauer Rundschau, K. Shvedtchikof, director of the Sovkino, writes as follows about the reasons back of the consolidation:

"The formation of the united concern for the photo and film industry will no doubt soon show itself to be a big step forward, for it puts an end to the former state of production at random and to the frequently unhealthful competition among the small, weak and scattered picture companies. The need for the organization of the new combine is very apparent just now and is made imperative through the new tasks arising for the Sovkino in connection with the economic, social and cultural reconstruction of the country. The cultural needs of the population are increasing very rapidly and the ability of the film industry to satisfy these needs is very limited. The existence of a large number of independent film companies in the Soviet Union has made it impossible thus far to work out a five-year-plan for the picture industry. As the result of this condition the normal film requirements of the RSFSR [Russia proper] are being only half met.

"The comparative backwardness of the Soviet Russian film industry is explained, in part, by the insufficient development of its own production of apparatuses and film stock. At present the situation in the optical-mechanical industry is such that the orders for kino apparatuses can be only half filled and through the lack of replacements for parts and lamps 30 per cent of all the traveling films in the country are out of commission. And the production of film stock by no means meets the demand. Judging by the development of the industry so far, within a few years it will require an annual production of 200,000,000 meters of stock. Therefore, a second film stock factory must be built, especially as the lack of stock constitutes the greatest handicap to the development of the kino network and the advance of the kino among the broad masses of the people. This lack puts great difficulties in the way of the various public kino organizations and also makes it almost impossible for the new operators and directors to develop their talent and to rise to the status of 'prominents.'

"But the concentration of film renting and distribution will give the greatest importance to the new concern, because only thus does it become possible to look after the interests of the national republics. Of course there have been film companies in existence up to now in the national republics, but none of them could exist without the market of the big RSFSR. Consequently, they have had to reckon with that market instead of being able to go ahead with productions in the direct interest of their own republics.

"In consequence we must note that at present there is a story crisis in the Soviet Russian film industry which will undoubtedly get worse unless there is a material shift in the industry, especially as in the future the national film will receive much greater consideration than formerly."

SIZE OF SCREEN

IF early motion pictures had been exhibited in theatres instead of stores there would never have been any twenty-foot-wide screens. The natural tendency would have been to make them as wide as stages," according to William E. Waddell, who with John D. Elms has been working for the past eight years on the development of Grandeur film which will permit pictures to be shown on a screen forty or more feet in width.

When pictures first developed into a peep show and as a nickelodeon novelty, Mr. Waddell invented and produced a narrow-width "endless" film for home projection.

In Waddell's and Elm's first experiments they tried by means of two cameras to obtain stereoscopic views, but abandoned it. Then they decided that only a wider film would be logical, so they came to what is now the Grandeur process.

William Haines, the screen cut-up, and Leila Hyams will be teamed again in "Way Out West."

CURRENT MUSICAL HAPPENINGS HERE AND ABROAD

A SERIOUS LOSS

Disbanding of American Orchestral Society—Attempt at Reorganization

By OLIN DOWNES.

IT is eminently to be desired that the extremely valuable educational work of the American Orchestral Society will not cease with the dissolution of that organization as it now stands, and that reorganization and continuation of its activities can be quickly accomplished.

The announcement published last Thursday that, consequent upon the resignation of the society's conductor, Chalmers Clifton, its founder and maintainer, Mrs. E. H. Harriman, had decided to relinquish the presidency and withdraw her financial support has been received with apprehension by the musical public. The reasons for Mrs. Harriman's withdrawal are clear and have ample justification. The public is greatly her debtor for the generosity and the far-sightedness she has shown in making possible the existence of an organization which has exerted a unique influence for the advancement of orchestral music in New York City and the United States. But this will not console the public which benefited by the programs of symphonic music which the society gave without charge of admission, or the young players who entered the orchestra and under Mr. Clifton's direction gained—again free of charge—the knowledge and experience which have secured many of them engagements in leading orchestras of the land, or those who believe that the purposes of musical education and philanthropy in America are served better by such activities as these than by the institutions which continue to overstock an overcrowded concert-market with solo and virtuoso players of instruments.

APPREHENSION lest this useful and constructive organization pass out of existence is the greater for the excellent reason that the educational measures adopted by the American Orchestral Society and carried into effect through Mrs. Harriman's support worked. There was not merely talk about results and elaborate plans made for an indefinite future. Young men entered the American Orchestral Society, received training and experience, went from there in many cases into leading American orchestras and into lesser known bodies, and were fairly started on their musical careers. This society has been conspicuously successful in achieving stated objectives, which have been sound and worth while. Its primary purpose has been the preparation of young players through actual experience and acquaintance with the standard orchestral literature for careers as members of professional symphonic bodies. Today its graduates are in all but two of the great orchestras of the land.

Players were duly tested before being admitted to the student orchestra, a number of whose members materialized as a result of the educational orchestral work carried on extensively by the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Society in the high schools of this city. In the course of the season contests were given in public halls before large invited audiences. The repertory performed was of a wide range. It included last year a Bach suite, a Beethoven symphony—the Second—and two Beethoven overtures, two symphonies of Brahms, an overture and Concerto Grosso of Handel, two Haydn symphonies, a symphony and the A major violin concerto of Mozart, Strauss's "Don Juan" and "Tod und Verklärung," two Tchaikovsky symphonies and the "Romeo and Juliet" overture, a Vivaldi Concerto for stringed orchestra, Wagnerian excerpts from "Tristan" and "Meistersinger" and more modern works by Albeniz, Berlioz, Borodin, Debussy, de Falla, Delius, Loeffler, Prokofieff, Ravel and others—an interesting and highly representative list for any ten concerts given by any orchestra.

THE student players were assisted by a small number of professionals at first desks. They not only played representative works of the current orchestral repertory, but also accompanied soloists, a very valuable and necessary branch of orchestral training. The appearance of soloists with the American Orchestral Society, moreover, gave these young players, whose opportunities for appearances with orchestra are rare, the opening to gain experience and poise under circumstances appropriate to their capacities, instead of being pitchforked onto a concert stage with professional orchestras and under circumstances for which they could not be fully prepared. To vary this student fare and to give further experience to the young orchestral players, it was the custom on infrequent occasions for the society to invite some soloist of experience to play with the orchestra, thus giving players and audiences contact with the authority and mature conceptions of finished artists. Nor is the benefit to the public of these concerts to be forgotten. By applying for tickets, any lover of orchestral music could listen to a series of fine programs performed, not with the technical finish of a Boston or Philadelphia or New York Philharmonic-Symphony, but with spirit and prevailing adequacy, often brilliancy of treatment.

The American Orchestral Society extended its work beyond rehearsals and performances. Theory classes were held for members and also for pupils of private teachers. Finally, there were the conductors' classes. The conductors' class was required to attend conferences upon score-reading, baton technique, transposing instruments. Eighteen such conferences were held last season, in addition to thirteen practice periods with an orchestra of forty, when twenty symphonic compositions were studied and conducted under Mr. Clifton's supervision.

A further project for extending the work of the American Orchestral Society, under recent consideration, is worthy of mention here. If this society, in one form or another, is perpetuated, it is certainly a plan rich in possibilities. If the society is to pass from existence the idea is one that might be useful in the future elsewhere. Briefly, the proposal is, or was, to stabilize and stimulate musical development throughout the country by providing players to supplement the ranks of local musicians in various centres, and thus form new, complete symphony orchestras, which should become nuclei of local musical developments.

THE overflow of young orchestral players trained by the central organization in New York, plus the numbers of orchestral musicians who would enroll themselves as available players for the central body or for such localities as desired their services, provide material every season for new civic orchestras. In addition, there could be established a circulating library of orchestral music, to which a number of orchestras would subscribe and which they would maintain by much smaller payments than an orchestra establishing its own library would have to make.

The advantages of such a plan appear to be many. Its successful operation would furnish employment for orchestral players throughout the country. It would offer means of putting orchestral and symphonic music at a relatively modest cost within the reach of the smaller civic centres. It would supply, at modest salaries, positions and experience to young and ambitious conductors. Last, but not least, it would do much to effectively combat the mechanization of music in our big moving picture houses and other places of entertainment.

THE great number of excellent musicians who earned their livelihood in such places and, in so doing, contributed to the advancement of orchestral music, only to find themselves today out of work and apparently without a future in music, is extremely serious and disheartening. The incentive for young people to prepare themselves for an orchestral career has suddenly become very small. Yet there was never a larger public for orchestral music, and this public is growing. Must it be fed on canned music, or music by radio, till it has forgotten how a real orchestra sounds? That will not happen, as a matter of fact, because in the end the artificial product will not suffice, any more than the average radio program of today suffices for the wishes of the average listener of ordinary human intelligence. Orchestral music, despite obstacles, is certain to spread and come into its own, but it is time for definitely constructive measures.

The orchestra and the chorus are the real centres and generators of the musical life of a community. The chorus is only half effective without an orchestra to supplement it. Above all, we need more individual contributors, more community cooperation and less mechanization in our music.

Further details of a far-seeing project cannot be given here, although all details of operation, expenses, organizations, &c., have been carefully and methodically tabulated. This prospective phase of the work of the symphonic organization now passing out of existence has been mentioned for the general value of its suggestion, and as a further possibility of a musical institution which has shown its value so clearly that it should on no account be allowed to pass from existence. Its founder and its executives have put public-spirited lovers of music under an obligation to continue worthily the work they have begun.

HENRY HADLEY IN JAPAN.

HENRY HADLEY, American composer and conductor of the Manhattan Symphony Orchestra of New York, has been invited by Prince Tokugawa, through Viscount Konoye, to conduct the Tokyo Symphony Orchestra during the first half of the coming season. The orchestra numbers sixty-five instrumentalists and has been conducted during the past five years by Russian guest conductors. The programs, though inclining toward modernism, display catholicity of taste. Ravel, Scriabine and Debussy have been especially popular.

Mr. Hadley hopes to include at least one American work on each program, as he did with the Manhattan Symphony Orchestra. Since American compositions are practically unknown in the Orient, they promise to be an interesting feature to the auditors there. In addition, he will try to include also some modern Japanese works which are written in European idiom.

This is perhaps the first time that an American has been invited to conduct in Japan and marks the second invitation which Mr. Hadley has received from a distant country, the other being a visit to Buenos Aires a few years ago.

OUTDOOR MUSIC COAST TO COAST

THE thirteenth year of outdoor Summer symphonic concerts at the Lewisohn Stadium of the College of the City of New York will open on Monday evening, July 7, and will continue nightly through Sunday evening, Aug. 31. The conductors announced to appear during the season are Willem van Hoogstraten, who will conduct the first three and the last two weeks, and Albert Coates, who, in his third consecutive year, conducts the fourth, fifth and sixth weeks.

In addition to many new orchestral works, including several American compositions, a number of events which have proved popular with Stadium audiences in the past will be repeated this Summer. The most outstanding of these features are Beethoven's Ninth symphony, which will be played with the assistance of 200 voices of the Choral Symphony Society and with Jeannette Vreeland, Nevada Van Der Veer, Nelson Eddy and Arthur Hackett as soloists, to be given on July 22 and 23; the Denishawn Dancers, who make their fourth appearance at the Stadium on Aug. 12, 13 and 14; the Hall Johnson Negro Choir, in a program of spirituals on Aug. 19 and 20; Anna Duncan, Aug. 25 and 26. The Verdi Requiem will be performed with the aid of the Choral Symphony Society

With the exception of a handful of men who have chosen to rest for the Summer, the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra will be identical in size and personnel with that heard during the Winter in Carnegie Hall and this Spring in Europe.

Tickets for these concerts will remain at the old price of 25 cents to $1 each.

The Syracuse University Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of André Polah, plans to give a series of open-air Summer concerts in John Crouse College Auditorium. The regular orchestra will be augmented by forty Syracuse musicians, bringing the total to seventy or eighty players.

More than 5,000 singers, representing forty different societies from eleven States, will take part in the coming sessions of the National German Sängerfest to be held in Detroit, Mich., June 18, 19 and 20. Juliette Lippe, soprano, and Marcel Salzinger, baritone, have been engaged as soloists, and a chorus of 3,000 school children under the direction of Fowler Smith will sing at one of the two matinees. Instrumental music will be provided by the Detroit Symphony Orchestra conducted by Victor Kolar.

The St. Louis Municipal Opera opened its twelfth season at the natural amphitheatre in Forest Park with Sigmund Romberg's "Nina Rosa." An innovation used for the first time in this production was the enormous revolving stage, said to be the largest in America, and installed at a cost of $10,000. Max Steindel will conduct the orchestra, consisting of fifty members, and a regular chorus of 100. Milton I. Shubert of New York has been engaged as general production manager, Giuseppe Bamboschek musical director, William Howard assistant musical director and Lew Morton stage director.

The annual Summer series of thirty-two concerts at the Hollywood Bowl begin Tuesday evening, July 8. Glenn M. Tindall, business manager, announces that the entire personnel of the orchestra has been reengaged for five years, thus assuring music patrons of Southern California of the future continuance of these "symphonies under the stars."

Conductors who have been engaged for the coming season are Alfred Hertz, four concerts in one week, beginning July 8; Karl Krueger, leader of the Seattle Symphony Orchestra, four concerts; Bernardino Molinari of Rome, sixteen concerts in four weeks; Pietro Cimini, conductor of the San Francisco and Los Angeles Opera Association, one concert, and E. Fernandez Arbos of Madrid, seven concerts, concluding the season. Soloists thus far engaged include Elsa Alsen, soprano; Richard Crooks, tenor; Percy Grainger, pianist; Margaret Matzenauer, mezzo-soprano, and Alfred Wallenstein, 'cellist. Negotiations for other soloists, ballets and innovations will be announced later.

"CHRISTOPH COLUMBUS" PREMIERE

Berlin Hears New Claudel-Milhaud Work—Film Plays Large Part—Tradition Disregarded—Nationalists Demonstrate

By ALFRED EINSTEIN.

BERLIN, May 10.

THOUGH offered as opera, "Christoph Columbus," by Paul Claudel and Darius Milhaud, wanders far afield from the usual concept of the word. To Wagner the term meant "a plot consisting of three chief situations of effective content which stand out clearly despite ramifications. To effect this is the aim of my art." What did the term signify to Verdi? "That art which lacks originality, naturalness and simplicity is no longer art." This is the way an opera writer speaks who desires to work with pure dramatic or musical means. Claudel, who himself conjures up the shade of Wagner in his official statement on "Christoph Columbus," is anti-Wagnerian, and makes no effort to be dramatic in this sense. In addition, Milhaud's music in this work has a wholly different function from that in true opera. Here the music does not live through the action. The spoken word works up into song and the murmuring to melody, but the action is not immersed in the unembodied and bewitching flow of the music. Realistic action wanders off into mystical details, with the result that the dramatic details are destroyed at every step by the oratorical and epic. It is all a quite complete dissolution of the traditional concept of the word opera.

Since both the creators are French, they are necessarily full of tradition. They fetch their material partly out of the gray distant past and partly out of recent epochs. The life, sorrows, sufferings and death of Christopher Columbus do not follow the heroic fate of the historical personage, "the fool or genius," but rather the fanatically possessed one whose name was "Christophorus, representative of Christ." It follows rather also Columbus, champion of the emblem of the divine dove who raises the standard of the cross upon the continent of the Western Hemisphere. Columbus is here the favorite and consecrated one of Queen Isabella, victor in the name of the Virgin and all the Spanish saints. It is history in the reflection of the medieval mystery plays.

THERE is a speaker or Narrator, after the fashion of the street singer in primitive balladry, who explains the changing scenes in the action. The Narrator resembles his prototype in Italian oratorio, the Evangelist of the Passion. He resembles also the speaker in Stravinsky's "L'Histoire du Soldat" and in "Oedipus Rex." And just as the speaker in "Oedipus Rex" announces the famous scene of recognition, here the Narrator proclaims the mutiny of the crew with the words, "Here begins the great scene, the famous scene of the revolt of the sailors."

The chorus plays the double rôle of the interested spectator and also participates in the action from time to time. In addition, it suddenly shares the dialogue with the Narrator, doffs costumes, strikes the weapons from the hands of the hero's critics, and acts as the interpreter of the poet and musician. Such a scene often becomes merely a dramatic incident, as, for example, the recruiting among the rabble for the three caravels of Columbus, with its outcries, tumult and fanfares. Then there is the scene of the historical mutiny which seems inevitable, at the end of the first act.

THE action, which is simultaneously going on at the front and rear of the stage, often clashes and becomes entangled. Columbus steps out of his dramatic sphere in the action and, descending into the region of the chorus, loses himself in the realms of contemplation. Though he sits there, he lives through his life symbolically. He beholds his own fate, and in the course of this waking dream sees himself in various transformations: as the scoffing chorus, as Strindbergian cook, and as personified consciousness. The mysticism and allegory of the medieval play become entangled in the scheme. The court of the Spanish King appears not only in heraldic raiment but also in the guise of a heroic ballet. The scene divides itself, just as our consciousness can and does divide itself, both in dream and in reality. Such a scene is that where the sailors are washed against the reefs, and one sees the reflected image in the motion picture. The film pictures thoughts, memories and background. It serves as commentary and complement of the action. America is not shown, only a bit of land upon which Columbus plants the flag with the cross. It is America, the land of mystery which resists discovery, and appears only in the scene of the false Mexican gods—a classical memory of Claudel's—the idols who wish to waylay and to confuse Columbus's way through the storm as did Neptune when Aeneas took the road to Latium.

This scene is also the mythical and mythological counterpart of the point in the dramatic crisis in the Christian, Catholic play of the dove and cross, the play with Golgotha and sacrificial messengers, with the paradise of Elysium. Here Isabella and her maidens tarry a bit, and force us, it must be confessed, to tarry also a bit too long, perhaps.

THIS unusual work, which affects us quite directly in many scenes, which never loses form even in its complexity, and which remains poetic and strong with all its word-spinning, is unconvincing and literary in spite of everything.

Let us leave this transformation of the historical Columbus into a mythical and legendary figure. We shall proceed with it until the portrayal of his extreme humiliation. The "mystery" finally becomes too much for us. It becomes purely ecclesiastical and at times almost canting. A stage consecration play will do well enough, but here the anti-Wagnerian becomes a disciple in spite of himself. To put it rather mildly, the Frenchman becomes an extremely faithful adherent of Wagner, "the old magician" of Nietzsche, the poet and composer of "Parsifal."

It is incontestable that the text requires this sort of music. Milhaud's score functions in many ways. It serves as mural background to the tale of the narrator, with a quiet though pulsating accompaniment in the percussion. It makes an idle display of niceness which is rather useless. It supplies material for the aria-like solos. In character it has a rather individual melodic repression which recalls old French ballads or oratorical and connected psalmody, a primitive rhythmic declamation. Over a completely separated orchestral background it often joins the "decorative chorus," as in the duet with the cook or in Isabella's church scene.

THE music is prominent compared with the drama, which it sets off and incidentally interrupts. In the mutiny scene, for example, where one expects a dramatic mass crescendo of the greatest violence, it breaks off twice instead with what seems intentional stylizing.

The principal vehicle of the music is the chorus, one of every possible combination and method of expression. It is a church organ in its heavy and solemn intoning at the beginning and end of the first act. It becomes a dramatis persona and encroaches upon the stage action actively, as when it exhorts the leading characters. Its music ranges from primitive chord structure to polyphonic configuration, but it is to be noted that the primitive is, so to speak, almost always harmonically denatured.

The music throughout is strongly rhythmic and only seemingly simple, as, for example, in the forceful and suggestive "Poor Sailors." Frequently it loses the character and characteristic of melodic structure. The single stroke which is easily the most effective part of the entire opera is the recurring theme in the wind instruments during the recruiting scene, with its acoustical tumult. Here and there are to be discovered some outstanding and excellent details. These include the extravagant and scurrilous entrance of the street minstrels, which ends with an ensemble of wanton revelry; the intricate accompaniment music for the king's council session; the solemn liturgical concordance for the funeral train of the dead Isabella, and the hollow, dry sounds in the accompaniment for the dialogue of the demons.

IN the first act the poet has concerned himself with three or four scenes which would not have missed their effect in any event even if the music were more or less realistic or stylized. In the second act the composer should have supported the poet more, since here the latter has given allegory and symbolism. Only the scene of the citizens' revolt (in the chorus), which has simply an orchestral background, is refreshing. The scene with the cook lacks the authentic color of the supernatural. The scene in Elysium is simply a pallid image of Debussy's pallid music. At the close there is an asthmatic halleluiah. The music is metaphorical, a substitute. It is music which does not recognize the element of color. To sum up, it obtains by the expenditure of the greatest effort the minimum of effect.

There was also great waste in regard to scenery. The novel and sensational element in "Columbus" is the union of scenery and motion picture. This alliance is proved to be quite impossible, and this production demonstrates that the motion picture and theatrical scenery belong to two irreconcilable spheres. Aside from all this, the film part was weak and paltry and its colorless motion quite lifeless. The living portion was the scenery.

Paros Aravantinos succeeded admirably in producing some wonderful views: the silhouette of the ship in the harbor of Cadiz; the scene of the Mexican idols; the kingdom of the interregnum with the cypresses, church and Calvary.

THEODOR SCHEIDL is to be named first among the interpreters. Convincing in appearance, he sang with much beauty of tone. His reflected image in the other world, Max Roth, differed from him in his Lothario-like stature and more powerful voice. Fritz Soot, the pointed and declaiming tenor, was splendid in the three transformations. The remaining two or three dozen masculine voices must be content with a collective tribute.

Delia Reinhardt, since she is an artist and a musical soul, came with a meeting spirit to an unwelcome task—the two monotonous and tearful arias of Isabella. It was an error of Horth's, the stage manager, to cast Karl Amster, with his splendid bass-baritone, in the rôle of the Narrator. It should have been assigned to a sturdier and heavier actor.

The real soloist of the evening was the chorus. Led by Hugo Reudel and Alexander Kurth, its work bordered on the adventurous. Word of the prodigality of its force had already gone forth when it coped with the problems presented by "Oedipus Rex."

The manner in which Erich Kleiber held the whole production together merits admiration.

In the conversation in and about the State Opera it was an open secret that the entire devices for producing magical effects were hardly successful. The Kroll Opera should have been the scene of the production.

There was a scandal after the performance. At the close the applause was mixed with shrill whistling. While Milhaud, Kleiber, Horth and Reudel stood before the curtain, the conflict became more and more violent and ended in tumultous suspense. Of course this demonstration of a few youthful nationalists is not to be taken too seriously.

SOME ENGLISH VIEWS.

THE new French opera, "Christoph Columbus," by Paul Claudel, librettist, and Darius Milhaud, composer, which was heard a short time ago at the Berlin Opera House in Unter den Linden, presented many novel features and an unusual complexity of theme. "The strange opera of musical mystery," writes the correspondent of The London Morning Post, "was received with a stormy mingling of whistling, hissing and applause. All unite, however, in paying tribute to the achievements of the producers and of the chorus.

"M. Claudel treats the life of Columbus as a religious mystery, which is explained by a story teller to the chorus sitting to right and left of the orchestra. The chorus does not limit itself to listening and singing, but represents the general public and the generations that have succeeded Columbus.

"Columbus himself appears in two persons—Columbus in Time and Columbus in Eternity, who sits among the chorus with his back to the auditorium during most of the performance and takes an active part in the drama only when Columbus sets out upon his adventures at the beginning and when he dies in squalid poverty at Valladolid in the end.

"In addition to this the representation by actors is reinforced by the use of the cinema sometimes to provide moving scenery, but more often to suggest the mental background of the actors."

"Nominally an opera," says The London Times, "'Columbus' actually defies classification. There are at least as many speaking parts as singing ones, the action is carried on and interpreted by a narrator, and a choir which stretches from either side of the stage into the auditorium.

"Columbus is first seen, ill and aged, in a hovel at Valladolid. Urged by the choir, he joins it, and watches his life's story enacted by another Columbus, sometimes intervening to defend his conduct against a critic in the choir. Eventually he rejoins his other self in the Valladolid hovel, and both sing a duet. The first part ends with the discovery of America, and includes several effective scenes, such as the recruiting of a crew in Cadiz Harbor and the anger of the Mexican gods at the approach of Columbus. Seizing a cable, the opposite end of which is held 'by their brothers in Africa,' these fantastic and gorgeous deities lash the Atlantic waves, gradually working up, in the manner of sailors hauling on a rope, to a frenzy of rhythmic energy. But Columbus, in spite of storms and mutiny, reaches America. A scene of tropical foliage cuts in the middle, revealing the Atlantic and Columbus's caravels. This is a filmed scene."

NEWLY RECORDED MUSIC

New "Kreutzer" Sonata Played by Thibaud and Cortot—Mozart's Fifth Violin Concerto From Berlin

By COMPTON PAKENHAM.

FOR the month of June, Victor is content to release a single entirely fresh album. Musical Masterpiece M-72 contains Beethoven's sonata in A major (Op. 47) by Alfred Cortot (piano) and Jacques Thibaud (violin) on four records. Though the above designation may not convey much to the majority, the additional information that this is the "Kreutzer" should heighten the complexion of the case. There is a smack of bitter irony in the fact that the name of Rodolphe Kreutzer, eminent concert violinist and prolific composer himself, should come down to us almost entirely on the wings of this sonata dedicated to him by Beethoven. It will go further into time, also, for by its breadth and the ambitious lines upon which it was constructed the "Kreutzer" sonata has earned its position.

For the work Beethoven claimed that it was composed as though it was a concerto, and in consequence its demands on the powers of pianist and violinist are equal. Its playing from memory by Rubinstein and Wieniawski to audiences of the '70s became celebrated, and we are tempted to wonder how the performances during their American visit of 1872 compare with this recording. For, though it might be possible without a clue to identify them as Frenchmen, this is as ideal a pair as can be imagined at the present time to play the "Kreutzer." Not only is each an eminent performer in his own right, but for long they have been intimately associated in their work and also have had considerable recording experience, individually and together.

With his first entrance, a short passage linking the violin introduction to the initial theme, Cortot shows sympathy and remarkable delicateness. Throughout he fulfills the promise and maintains a splendid balance. Thibaud's tone becomes piercing toward the end of the first side, which may not be evident on all pressings, but makes full amends in the second movement, during which the players manage some exquisite tonal effects. The final presto is carried through with exhilarating verve.

Existing versions of the "Kreutzer" sonata are by Albert Sammons and William Murdoch, a good specimen of comparatively early electrical recording, to be had in Columbia Masterworks Album 53; and by Isolde Menges and Arthur de Greef in Victor Album 2. The present set is obviously intended to replace the latter. For this reason alone its publication may be regarded as premature.

STATISTICS would indicate that Columbia is fond of Mozart. With Masterworks Album 137 he is given a majority representation on the list, as from the issue of the Schubert Memorial sets. This time it is a violin concerto (No. 5 in A) by Joseph Wolfstahl and the Berlin State Opera orchestra under Dr. Weissmann, which appeared in Europe under the label of Parlophone.

During his nineteenth year (1775) Mozart composed the first five of his seven violin concertos. The task of mastering and developing the concerto was undertaken by the boy with a certain malice aforethought. Chafing at the indignities under which he worked as concertmaster of a small court orchestra—Hieronymus was Archbishop of Salzburg—he had his eyes upon a better position, the obtaining of which required the demonstration of very exceptional skill on the violin. Hence the concertos, deftly designed to his own ends, which, by laying down a definite pattern for this form, comprise an important link in musical development.

From the 1775 series, and indeed from the seven concertos to his credit, the fifth, in the happy key of A major, stands apart. Conveying a rare sense of complete unity, it contains an inexhaustible fund of pure melody and abounds in the high spirits of youth. This the present performers have captured. Weissmann's touch is essentially light, and the soloist carries a clear tone through delicately molded phrases. Particular attention is drawn to the adagio passage, appearing somewhat as a surprise between the first and second sections, in which Wolfsthal is at his quite exalted best. This is the first recorded violin concerto in which one is not painfully aware of the soloist. Wolfstahl is always present, but he has been well placed. At no point does one feel that some impossible, titanic virtuoso is towering before and overshadowing the orchestra.

CONSIDERATION of the problems involved and the probable returns makes one realize that the Gramophone Company deserves commendation for undertaking the labor which must have been required to make the four records in H. M. V. Album No. 94. Here we have Ernesto Boezi's "Missa Solemnis" sung by the choir of the Julian Chapel, St. Peter's, Rome, in the Church of Santa Maria d'Angeli. The performance is under the direction of Boezi who has been master of the chair for the past twenty-five years.

The Julian Choir can boast of a longer history than any musical institution in existence today. Founded in 1513 by Julius II, shortly before his death, it was given permanency thirty-nine years later under the direction of Palestrina. Until comparatively recently it shared the musical duties of St. Peter's with the Sistine Chapel Choir, which dated from the sixth century. Since the latter group has come to be only an occasionally reconstituted group drawn from the five Roman cathedrals—in which form it made a successful tour some seven years ago—the Julian has been the established choir of St. Peter's.

A member of the Pontifical Commission on Sacred Music and an elected fellow of the Royal Academy of Santa Cecilia, Boezi has composed a great deal of liturgical music, but as this has been intended for the use of his choir, nearly all has remained in manuscript.

This solemn mass, one designed for a special occasion, was composed in 1907 to be sung on the 29th of June (St. Peter's Day). Annually since then it has been performed on that date and last year was chosen as the mass to be used at the service of the beatification of Don Bosco.

From its origin and recognition it is obvious that Boezi's mass complies with tradition. For this reason, and in that it represents the Julian Choir, the records are bound to be of particular interest. The chief fault lies in the recording. Experience has proved that the electrical method—designed to bring lower registers into balance—has a tendency to distort the bass. Maturer voices are apt to get the better of the sopranos—the H. M. V. Bach B minor Mass showed this—and care should be taken to offset this inherent mechanical condition. It has been managed in the case of operatic chorus records, and with a small body such as this should be much simpler.

A NEWLY recorded piece of Wagner's was discovered almost by accident in the list of Odeon records released during May. So far as catalogues show, there is no previous disk of the Shepherd's lines from "Tannhäuser." The two sides run through the whole of Act I, scene 3, to the entrance of the Landgrave and his company of knights. Else Knepel as the Shepherd sounds as though she was making her gramophone début, but the chorus of Pilgrims is splendidly rich, Hans Clemens, as the prematurely repentent Tannhäuser, is excellent and the orchestra is precisely in its proper place.

The next number on the same list may also have a certain interest. As an importation, something over a year ago, it had considerable success. At that time New York was just recovering from Strauss's "The Egyptian Helen," and these two sides of Rose Pauly-Dreesen of the Berlin Opera found favor. It is hard to think that they can have any significance to those not interested in Strauss and the opera in question. As a commentary these should be played in comparison with something of an earlier vintage from the same source. Mme. Pauly-Dreesen seems to be in the regular run of traditional German opera singers, with a voice properly hardened by just this sort of treatment.

THE Shepherd's Song mentioned above brings to mind a complaint, or suggestion, frequently heard from record collectors. Is there so much to be gained from the use of regular singers of certain rôles that the possibility of finding a voice more suitable for recording is completely discounted? A single instance among many occurs in the "Siegfried" set mentioned last week. Miss Nora Gruhn could hardly be said to give a good account of herself in the short but tricky passages of the Bird. In the note accompanying the album stress was laid on the fact that the quartet employed was the same which had sung in the parts during the previous Covent Garden cycle. In the excitement of seeing Siegfried out of the wood, one may overlook vocal carelessness on the part of his well-intentioned guide, but in the quiet of a gramophone recital, which will repeat itself exactly until the surfaces are worn, it becomes monotonous. In the complete (sic) "Walküre," Howard Fry enters in the second act as Hunding. Having slain Siegmund and himself fallen dead at Wotan's feet, Fry lifts himself up to declaim the last lines of the god. Unfortunately, they are rather important lines, and the audience, having heard Schorr thunder through the previous disks, is not likely to be impressed. The explanation, from London, dealt with the matter of royalties. It is singularly weak. The whole question of casting and substitutions in midstream should be more carefully considered. At the present time French Columbia is the only company which appears to be giving it any thought.

CHICAGO'S RAVINIA SEASON

THE Ravinia "opera house in the woods" opens its nineteenth season on Saturday night, June 21, with Respighi's "The Sunken Bell," with Elisabeth Rethberg, Giovanni Martinelli, Julia Claussen and Mario Basiola in the leading rôles and Gennaro Papi conducting. The season extends to Sept. 1.

The repertory and casts for the first week follow:

Sunday night, June 22—"L'Amore dei tre Re" (The Love of Three Kings), by Montemezzi, with Lucrezia Bori, Edward Johnson, Giuseppe Danise and Virgilio Lazzari, Gennaro Papi conducting.

Monday night, June 23—"Marouf," by Rabaud, with Yvonne Gall, Mario Chamlee, Julia Claussen, Leon Rothier, Vittorio Trevisan and others, Louis Hasselmans conducting.

Tuesday night, June 24—"Madama Butterfly," by Puccini, with Elisabeth Rethberg, Armand Tokatyan, Ina Bourskaya, Mario Basiola and others, Gennaro Papi conducting.

Wednesday night, June 25—"Manon," by Massenet, with Lucrezia Bori, Mario Chamlee, Désiré Defrère, Leon Rothier and others, Louis Hasselmans conducting.

Thursday night, June 25—"Aïda," by Verdi, with Elisabeth Rethberg, Giovanni Martinelli, Giuseppe Danise, Ina Bourskaya, Virgilio Lazzari and others, Gennaro Papi conducting.

Friday night, June 27—"Louise," by Charpentier, with Yvonne Gall, Edward Johnson, Julia Claussen, Leon Rothier and others, Louis Hasselmans conducting.

Saturday night, June 28—"Il Trovatore," by Verdi, with Elisabeth Rethberg, Giovanni Martinelli, Julia Claussen, Giuseppe Danise and others, Gennaro Papi conducting.

The artists of the season include:

Sopranos—Lucrezia Bori, Yvonne Gall, Florence Macbeth, Margery Maxwell, Lola Monti-Gorsey and Elisabeth Rethberg.

Mezzo-sopranos and Contraltos—Ina Bourskaya, Julia Claussen, Anna Correnti, Philine Falco and Ada Paggi.

Tenors—Giuseppe Cavadore, Mario Chamlee, Edward Johnson, Giovanni Martinelli, Lodovico Oliviero, Armand Tokatyan and Marek Windheim.

Baritones—Mario Basiola, George Cehanovsky, Giuseppe Danise, Louis D'Angelo and Désiré Defrère.

Bassos—Paolo Ananian, Virgilio Lazzari, Leon Rothier and Vittorio Trevisan.

Conductors, Louis Hasselmans, Gennaro Papi and Wilfred Pelletier.

Premier danseuse, Ruth Page; premier danseur, Blake Scott.

In the novelties and revivals are the following operas:

"Anima Allegra," "L'Amico Fritz," "La Campana Sommersa" (The Sunken Bell), "Le Chemineau," "L'Elisir d'Amore," "L'Heure Espagnole," "Les Huguenots" (in part), "La Navarraise," "La Rondine," "La Vida Breve," "Mignon," "The Bartered Bride" (in German), and "The Secret of Suzanne."

A first opera by Walford Hyden, "The Chink and the Child," with a libretto by Thomas Burke, will have its première this month at Bournemouth, England. This opera is based on one of Mr. Burke's most famous stories of the London Limehouse district.

MENGELBERG IN LONDON

WILLEM MENGELBERG, after an absence from London of twenty-seven years, returned to Albert Hall for three concerts on May 14, 15 and 16 with the Amsterdam Concertgebouw Orchestra, which he has led for thirty-five years. The Dutch conductor was met at Harwich by Sir Thomas Beecham and the Mayor and members of the City Corporation. The two distinguished conductors traveled to London together, talking shop and exchanging reminiscences.

The programs chosen by Mr. Mengelberg and the reactions of the auditors and critics are of especial interest to concertgoers of the past season in New York since he shared the season as conductor of the Philharmonic Orchestra with Arturo Toscanini, whose concerts with the New York organization are scheduled in the English capital on June 1, 2, 3 and 4.

The first concert presented Beethoven's overture "Coriolanus" and the "Eroica" symphony, Wagner's overture and finale from "Tristan und Isolde" and Liszt's "The Preludes." This program "attracted a fairly large audience, though the hall was far from full," said The London Times the following day, and added that:

"We did not consider ourselves entirely fortunate in having pulled Beethoven from the pie for the first taste of the orchestra's quality. Dr. Mengelberg has that tiresome trick, dear to the virtuoso conductor, of emphasizing minor details as though to display his discovery of something which other conductors have overlooked in Beethoven. The symphony was marred by this; the inner parts of oboe or trumpet would be suddenly turned into outer parts, and the impression created was of greater concentration on momentary effects than on the substance of Beethoven. Dr. Mengelberg's control, however, is absolute, and there was much to admire in the steady tempi of both overture and symphony, the undeviating unanimity of the strings, the beautiful qualities of wind tone. In the Tristan excerpt, though a precise calculation took the place of that surging impulse which is at the heart of Wagner's music, we could revel in a maze of continuously beautiful sound made wholly articulate by highly polished phrasing."

"Infinitely preferable for most of us," commented The Daily Telegraph, "would have been a little more modernization, or, let us say, a little less of the almost too familiar. And this leads one to wonder why he has excluded from these three programs everything that can be called even approximately new, save Ravel's 'Bolero.'

"The main characteristic of the orchestral playing was an extraordinary suavity. The 'Eroica,' of course, was the clou of the concert, and I confess I never realized before how so clever a conductor as Dr. Mengelberg could find so many points in its score that had hardly been noticed before. The sublimation of smoothness was the first. Moreover, the performance took on itself the atmosphere almost of a religious ceremony, because the symphony was played, generally speaking, in a very slow tempo, with no applause at the close of the separate movements. The applause, however, which burst forth at the end of the complete work, was magnificent to hear, albeit one would have liked to hear more Beethoven direct and less of Mengelberg's points."

The program of the second concert was Weber's "Oberon" overture, Mozart's pianoforte concerto in D minor with José Iturbi as soloist, Ravel's "Bolero" and Tchaikovsky's "Pathétique" symphony. The Times found the strings suave and revealing unanimity and the woods in general good, though the oboe too pungent, and the brass rather coarse.

"The 'Bolero' would be great fun if it were half its length; by the end its iteration becomes irritating.

"In the more familiar works Dr. Mengelberg showed us some unfamiliar features. Even in the 'Oberon' overture he has discovered a little piece of counterpoint which has escaped the notice of other conductors. It was duly underlined last night. In the concerto Mr. Iturbi played the solo part fluently, but with too little appreciation of the difficulty of making the softer passages carry through the spacious hall. The balance between pianoforte and orchestra was not good and the whole performance lacked homogeneity.

"Dr. Mengelberg's interpretation of the symphony was disappointing. Here is a work in which a certain amount of latitude is legitimate. But it has its clearly defined form, and that must be preserved as clearly as in any classical symphony. Dr. Mengelberg pulled the first movement out of shape, exaggerating both the changes of pace and the sentiment until it became cloying."

The Times also voiced the resentment of some concerning lack of advance knowledge and announcement of programs.

"On one point alone we would question the wisdom of the management. The more musical part of the concertgoing public of London is accustomed to being told what music it is to hear before it buys its tickets. It is not content with the information that it is to hear a famous orchestra and conductor in a selection of this, that and the other. It was asked to be content in this case, and those who had not happened to look at the advertisements of the day arrived at the hall without knowing what symphony they were to hear. The program did not even say precisely what are the works of the two remaining concerts. The concertgoer was treated like a little Jack Horner, who must put in his thumb and pull out a plum."

The concluding concert of the series comprised Brahms's First symphony and Richard Strauss's "Ein Heldenleben," which the composer dedicated to the conductor.

CONCERTS OF WEEK

The People's Chorus, under the direction of L. Camilieri, will present the first of two complimentary concerts at Town Hall Thursday evening. Dorothy Bowen, soprano, and Gilbert Ross, violinist, will be the assisting artists on this occasion. Miss Bowen will sing the aria, "Depuis le jour," from "Louise," by Charpentier, and Mr. Ross will give a program of music by Burleigh, Tartini-Kreisler, Boulanger and Mozart.

The audience will be invited to join in the singing of a few familiar songs from the First Song Book of the People's Chorus. Admission cards for these concerts may be obtained at 41 East Forty-second Street, Room 814.

The commencement exercises of the Institute of Musical Art of the Juilliard School of Music will be held at Carnegie Hall Monday evening at 8:15. An address to the graduates will be made by Walter Damrosch, and Willem Willeke will conduct the orchestra.

"The Golden Trail" by Charles Wakefield Cadman will be presented by the Choral Opera Group at the Heckscher Theatre Thursday and Friday evenings at 8:15. This work is described as "a musical comedy portraying the adventures of the pioneers of '49," and is in three acts.

Carmen Reggio will give a song recital this evening at 8:30 o'clock in Carnegie Chamber Music Hall, accompanied by Loretto O'Connell at the piano. Mme. Reggio will sing selections from the classics and a group of arias from popular operas. The assisting artists will be Alfonso Attanasio, tenor, and Filippo Parisi, baritone.

The Roxy Theatre will hold over for a second week its condensed version of Bizet's "Carmen." The rôles of Carmen and Don José will be sung this week by Devora Nadworney and Harold Van Duzee.

The Heckscher Foundation Symphony Orchestra, consisting of ninety-three boys and girls between the ages of 10 and 16, will give its final concert of the season on Saturday evening, under the direction of Ronald Murat.

Max Rosen is scheduled to give a violin recital on July 19 in the Auditorium at Ocean Grove, N. J.

ACTIVITIES OF MUSICIANS

San Francisco's New Conductors—Koussevitzky in Paris—News and Notes

ISSAY DOBROWEN, young Russian conductor, will appear next season as guest conductor with the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Dobrowen has conducted in London and in Slavic, Central European and Scandinavian countries with much success. His interpretations of Tchaikovsky are said to suit his gifts especially.

Basil Cameron, according to The London Daily Telegraph, is also to appear as guest conductor next season with the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra. For the past few years Mr. Cameron has been orchestral conductor at Hastings, England. Julius Harrison, the well-known operatic conductor, is reported to have been appointed in Mr. Cameron's place at Hastings.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who recently sailed for Europe, has received the decoration of Officer of the Legion of Honor. This was bestowed upon him in recognition of his services to music in general and particularly to French music. During his stay abroad Mr. Koussevitzky will conduct his annual symphonic series in Paris.

Ethel Leginska of Yorkshire, England, and Boston, Mass., is said to be arranging a visit to the United States of a British women's orchestra.

Negotiations are reported between the Chicago Civic Opera and John O'Sullivan, the Irish tenor, for appearances in this country next season.

The Woman's Symphony Orchestra of Chicago has recently completed its fourth season under the direction of Ebba Sundstrom. Six concerts have been given during the past season, with several soloists and two guest conductors, Gena Branscombe, American composer-pianist, and Ethel Leginska, conductor of the Boston Woman's Symphony Orchestra.

John L. Severance, assisted by Nikolai Sokoloff, officiated recently at the laying of the cornerstone of Severance Hall, the new home of the Cleveland Orchestra, which will be completed in time for the next orchestral season in the Fall.

Charles Wakefield Cadman's "Sonata in G" was recently given its premier performance at the Friday Morning Club in Los Angeles, while the Cadman Creative Club presented his song cycle "White Enchantment" at the Beaux Arts Auditorium in the same city, sung by Margaret Morris, Rosalie Frye, Otto Ploetz and Harold Kellogg, with the composer at the piano.

Muriel Kerr, pianist, has just completed a tour of thirty concerts across the continent. Miss Kerr begins her second American tour Oct. 3, when she appears as soloist at the Worcester Festival.

Mrs. Edward W. Bok, by a contribution of $25,000, opened the campaign for a $200,000 endowment for the Philadelphia Settlement Music School. The income from this fund will admit 400 more children to the school, which was erected in 1917 by Mrs. Bok as a memorial to her mother, Louisa Knapp Curtis.

Zlatko Balakovic, young South Slavic violinist, has been appearing with much success in various European cities. He will play with London, Holland and other orchestras after a brief Summer vacation in the United States.

Marion Kerby and John J. Niles are appearing in England in recitals of Negro exaltations, plantation songs and mountain ballads.

Gina Pinnera, American soprano, has been giving a series of concerts in Havana. In addition to her programs of operatic arias, Lieder by Brahms, Marx, Strauss and others, and songs by Respighi and Cimara, Miss Pinnera also includes an American group of songs by Wolf, Kramer and Densmore.

Among the many American vocal and instrumental artists who have been heard recently in Stockholm are Paul Althouse, who appeared in the rôle of Canio in "Pagliacci" at the Royal Opera House before a distinguished audience. At the new Concert House, George Morgan, baritone, gave a varied program, while Eva Gauthier presented a concert at the Music Academy, singing Spanish, Italian and French folksongs among other compositions.

Claudia Muzio of the Chicago Civic Opera Company recently sang a performance of "La Traviata" at the Royal Opera in Rome. At the end of May she sails for Buenos Aires, where she will sing at the Colon Theatre. At the close of the South American season the singer will return to the United States.

The well-known movie star, Ramon Navarro, is studying voice with Louis Graveure at the Michigan State College.

Ruth Breton will give a violin recital on June 8 at Wells College, Aurora-on-Cayuga, N. Y. This concert will be included in the Commencement Week program.

Other American artists who have been heard in Havana are Edwin and Jewel Bethany Hughes, who recently appeared as soloists with the Philharmonic Orchestra there, playing the Mozart Double Concerto for two pianos.

A joint recital will be given next season at Princeton University by Yelly d'Aranyi, Hungarian violinist, and Myra Hess, English pianist.

Tamaki Miura, who has been singing Madama Butterfly with success in Genoa and Torino, Italy, will return to the United States some time this Summer. Mme. Miura plans a trip to Japan next season in order to visit her mother there, and also to give a series of concerts which are now being arranged for her.

Os-ke-non-ton, the American Indian singer, who has been abroad concertizing in Europe for the past three years, sang at the recent fête in Paris of the Franco-American Settlement at Belleville. The pageant was written and directed by Sacha Guitry, who appeared in it with Yvonne Printemps. Many of the leading figures in the diplomatic, musical, stage and army life of the two countries attended the fête.

PHILADELPHIA DENIES LONDON RUMOR.

Repeated paragraphs in the London press have stated the possibility of a visit to that city next season of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra under Leopold Stokowski. These have been denied officially to THE NEW YORK TIMES by William P. Barba, secretary of the Philadelphia Orchestra Association, in a communication which states that the Philadelphia organization "has no such plans under consideration at the present time."

PRIZES AND CONTESTS.

THE Society for the Publication of American Music announces its 1930-31 competition for publication of new chamber music works by American composers. Two or three compositions will be selected and the society will pay for their publication. Since its founding in 1919 twenty-three chamber music works and five orchestral compositions have been published by the society. The contest this year, however, is limited to chamber music works only. The terms of the competition are as follows:

(1) Compositions should be the work of American citizens or by composers who have applied for citizenship.

(2) Manuscripts should not bear the composer's name, but should be marked with a pseudonym. The composer's name and address and postage for the return of the manuscript should be enclosed in a sealed envelope marked on the outside with the pseudonym.

(3) Manuscripts should be sent to the secretary, Mr. Oscar Wagner, at 49 East Fifty-second Street, before Oct. 15, 1930.

Three scholarships in singing, the gift of Samuel Insull, Stanley Field, Ernest R. Graham, Louis B. Kuppenheimer and Edward F. Swift, provide for a year of study in Milan for three Chicago students, to be supplemented by a second year if progress warrants the extension.

The rules will be the same as last year, i. e., candidates must be prepared to sing passages selected by the judges from three complete operatic rôles.

Last year's winners, now in Italy, are Miss Lydia Mihm of River Forest and Miss Helen Ornstein of Chicago.

THE LEADERLESS ORCHESTRA

To the Editor of The New York Times:

AS the music season closes and musical organizations begin laying plans for the support of the New York public for next season, I should like to present certain aspects of the work and possibilities of the Conductorless Symphony Orchestra.

In the first place, it should be stressed that the Conductorless is not attempting in any respect to compete with the established orchestras. Its activities and opportunities lie in a totally different field, and just for this reason the new organization, which has already roused so much interest, deserves the active support of the musical public.

The ruling spirit, the prevailing mood of the Conductorless Orchestra, is that which we are accustomed to associate with chamber music: the perfect interaction and cooperation of a group of artists, each contributing his own part and completely aware of his relation to the whole. The aim is per se of value and has, in addition, valuable correlaries both for members of the orchestra and for the audience. For the musicians, it means a heightened interest in all they do, since the responsibility is vested not in a single individual but in each participant. At a time when the tendency is toward the mechanization of all musical production, such activity is bound to be a most constructive force in the whole musical world.

The sharing of responsibility of interpretation and performance in the concerts of the Conductorless gives a peculiar vitality and zest to the programs. The enthusiasm of the creators is shared by all who listen.

Finally, there is a practical advantage inherent in the cooperative nature of the venture: expense is reduced to the minimum possible for orchestral music. It appears that the Conductorless may actually be the long-hoped-for orchestra which can exist without a subsidy: it needs no support other than the subscription of its public. And the opportunity to give this support is one which no music lover in New York can afford to miss.

JOHN POWELL.

AMERICAN DESIGN IN RUGS AND CARPETS COMING FORWARD

NEW FLOOR COVERINGS

Color and Shape in Modern Furnishings Should Harmonize With Design in Rugs

By ELISABETH LUTHER CARY.

EDGAR ALLAN POE, in a moment of extraordinary insight, declared that a carpet is the soul of a room. Certainly a lost soul in the hands of a commercial designer, but capable of good deeds innumerable under the direction of an artist who understands it. All the colors and shapes in the room should derive from it, Poe continues, warming to his subject, and a writer in L'Art Vivant obviously agrees with him, elaborating the further demand that a carpet should reflect three influences (unfortunately more divergent than concomitant): the inspiration of the artist, the aspect of the place, the spirit of the occupant. Referring to a special example by the young decorator Jacques Vergé, he points his moral. This carpet, of a magnificent crimson moving toward yellow, could not conceivably belong, he says, to a characterless person or be found in a room the colors of which had been intentionally attenuated.

No counsel of perfection can be followed to its furthest limit; but we shall dare the incredulity of L'Art Vivant and its compatriots by placing the modernist carpets of our own country on an even plane with those of the brave young French designers who have not been without honor in France; whose parsnips, let us hope, have been liberally buttered by the many kind words they have publicly received. Vergé, his kindly critic tells us, is veritably original but with the courtesy necessary to those who desire their originality to be relished. No doubt criticism in the experienced land of France shares this courtesy for the same reason. It prevails, in any case, to a far greater extent than in America, where there is a kind of prejudice, crude, if you like, against words that by any possibility could butter parsnips. This prejudice has been more than once ascribed to self-respect; it more probably comes from an absurd American notion that the object of praise is ever so faintly—or not at all faintly—contemptuous of it.

In the matter of carpets, however, we are justified in following the example of the French critics in paying homage to our own, since our own have an amazing genius for keeping out of the way of the public. An exhibition by Ralph Pearson of rugs designed by American artists gives the opportunity. These rugs have the primary charm of extreme diversity, although with the unaccountable period magic they one and all tell us that they are in the modernistic spirit and were made today.

THE artists were brought together by Ralph Pearson, who persistently tests the readiness of the public to free itself from standardization and recover "a cultural independence from slavish deference to foreign influence." The artists themselves are all adept in modern creative design and were asked to make designs that in each case seemed to the designer suitable for an American rug, the outgrowth of our environment and our present interests.

The rugs now on exhibition are by John Storrs, Nura and Buk Ulreich, George Biddle, Henriette Reiss and Ralph Pearson. Nura has taken her favorite themes, children and cats, and has treated them with the same intuitive understanding that appears in her paintings. But she has added the one quality that makes art designed for utilitarian purposes the proud equal of free art—the quality of appropriateness to her medium. With her lucid perception of what is the medium's due, she steps out to meet it half way. She becomes a trifle stiff to suit the knotted line; she makes herself rugged to please the wool, so unlike in texture to the smoothness of oil paint. She eliminates all daintiness of ribbon and ruffle with which the children of her paintings are adorned, as the wool would flout such trivial tasks. Her rug entitled "Our Home" is that white blackbird of modern art, a true and natural primitive. Thus Nura. Singularly appealing here as elsewhere.

OTHERS make each their individual appeal to taste, intelligence or fancy. Buk Ulreich exhibits a rug in the design of which conventionalized bright broncos cross wide rivers of black in a whirling race with dogs that cheer them on. "Good theatre!" Shakespeare might have cried. Good circus, certainly. Mr. Storrs is sternly geometric and powerful. Mr. Pearson uses a method of suggesting the third dimension more logical and satisfying than any other for the covering of flat surfaces.

Mr. Biddle's contribution is intended for a wall hanging and is a decorative illustration of the activities of fishermen in the South Seas. Although woven of specially fine wool, it remains yarn, not silk, which is all to the good for those who feel the charm of depth in texture that is firm and soft and dull. But the artist seems rather to have overestimated the fineness of the weaving, adjusting his design to a smoother and more brilliant surface and emphasizing its pictorial quality. Which, no doubt, is a way to look at it. It takes a comparatively brief association with the strong type of modernism in the floor covering to awaken the taste for an equal austerity in the wall covering, however.

The exhibition is singularly devoid of the helpful substitute for imagination known as the "ensemble." The room in which the rugs are shown is a room, of course, but there is no ensemble. The wall rug hangs on the wall. And so do some of the floor rugs; others are thrown across chairs or settees. You may take them or leave them. Mostly, alas, you leave them, and regret it.

The invitations for the important exhibition of so-called Polish rugs at the Metropolitan Museum have been sent out. It will be interesting to interrogate one's self as to whether our present civilization is most truly represented by such weavings as we shall see on the stately museum walls, costly, silken, gleaming; or by such weavings as those of which we have been speaking, rich in thought and skill and color, plain and durable in substance. A pity the two types could not hang together for illuminating comparison.

Comparison, however, is only illuminating when one can keep a free mind. To invest with superiority any object belonging to you only because it does belong to you is almost the worst of the many forms assumed by snobbishness. Going back to our first contention: that our American rugs are on the same plane as the French, it should be understood that their design alone is in question. The freedom, spaciousness and vigor of their design speak of qualities that at least we should be glad to believe typical of the nation—or, let us admit that we do believe typical of the nation, and today more typical of American art than ever before. They seem to belong to us through the gifts of the young generation, which, contrary to much elderly opinion, bestows as much as it receives. Perhaps the chief duty of the old is to keep the young from a too-absorbing gratitude to the past. Possibly our duty is to show a liberal gratitude on our own side in accepting the life-enhancing gifts brought to us by the young. Duty or not, it should be our pleasure to that extent to "go modern."

GIORGIO DE CHIRICO is shown at the Balzac Galleries. Literally, as self-portraits to the number of five are on the list. It would be difficult to accuse Chirico of vanity or insincerity in the presence of those portraits. He has added not a cubit to stature of his beauty in any one of them, but has written himself down a plain stout youngster of twenty in the 1908 portrait, growing into a plainer, stouter man of 42 in the 1930 portrait. His self-portraits and the sketch of his life in the preface to his catalogue combine to throw some light upon his curious art.

Although he was born in Greece, he is Italian by lineage, his father having been an Italian engineer who built the first railway line through the plains of Thessaly. At 17 he left Greece to study in Munich and to absorb the unfortunate influence of Boecklin. He then went to Milan and was stout-hearted enough to destroy all the paintings he had made under Boecklin's thrall. In Florence and Rome he developed his personality. One sees him, the heavily built young man, making drawings from the nude and lightening the weight of his task with rococo additions to the anatomy of his model.

Later he is to lighten a conscious heaviness with lively accessories to the mass of his subject. One of his famous horses is in the exhibition—not a very good one, but a horse, and with a crinkled mane and tail that serve for buoyancy. Try as he may, however, he never quite achieves liveliness. Cavort as they may, his horses heavily pound a solid earth.

Whoever has seen any number of his figure subjects knows that he loves to paint beauty, Greek beauty as he himself ages in the Italian mold. One example of this tendency is here, and in the shape of a painter's joke. "The Prodigal Son," two figures, one in Greek dress, with the beautiful featureless face that so often appears in his more important works, the other a kind of mechanical invention of sur-realist suggestion.

In this exhibition he is best with the characteristic composition illustrated on this page, a lifeless plaster bust, some wild ducks dead on a table, a weighty strangeness in their aspect, not realism and certainly not fancy.

CHIRICO lives now in Paris and has escaped the lure of the Paris manner in his work. He came to Paris to paint scenery for "La Giara," an opera by the composer Alfredo Casella, and in that found, one must think, a natural expression for his decorative taste. A double portrait of himself and his mother, painted when he was 21, carries the symbol of his two-sided art in the flower and onion placed near the figures. But like a good son he has given the flower to his mother and kept the onion for himself. One feels he would have liked the flower.

LOCAL ART NOTES

The Downtown Gallery has conceived a novel experiment in the form of a special exhibition now open. A group of contemporary American painters and sculptors whose works command high prices have entered their finest examples to sell at $100 or less. This is considered an event. The paintings in oil, tempera, water-color and gouache and the sculpture in bronze and plaster (small editions) were in most cases made for this exhibition, planned months ago, and are new works limited only in size and price. More than thirty artists are represented, including Emil Branchard, Alexander Brook, Glen Coleman, Stuart Davis, Hunt Diederich, Duncan Ferguson, Anne Goldthwaite, Samuel Halpert, Pop Hart, Stefan Hirsch, Bernard Karfoil, Morris Kantor, Walt Kuhn, Robert Laurent, Reuben Nakian, Joseph Pollet, A. Walkowitz, Max Weber, M. Zorach and William Zorach. The exhibition continues until July 1 and the gallery is open daily from 10 to 6.

The School Art League's Saturday Class for Gifted Children, under the direction of Henry E. Fritz, will hold an exhibition of their work June 2 to 14, inclusive, at the Metropolitan Museum in Classroom K.

The Ehrich Galleries are holding an exhibition of early American portraits by Stuart, Copley, Sully, Neagle, Jarvis and Chester Harding until June 14.

Water-colors and drawings are being shown at the Weyhe Galleries until June 7. Some of the artists showing are William L'Engle, Sarah Berman, Robert Brown and Jessie Warneke.

An exhibition of renderings, drawings and types of ornament by Frank Lloyd Wright will be at the Architectural League until June 12. Approach and setting by Joseph Urban.

This is the third of a series arranged to show a cross-section of the work of living American architects, decorative sculptors and painters. The exhibition will show the high points and trends that have been followed in Europe and America in the use of plan and material. Some of the drawings will be an expression of the organic architectural philosophy of Mr. Wright. The exhibition is open every day and Sundays, without charge, to students of architecture and the allied arts and to the general public.

The annual award of the Rome Prize in architecture is to be announced Wednesday, June 4. The judgment will be held in the Grand Central Galleries, and the competing designs will be on exhibition in those galleries from June 4 to June 7, inclusive.

The competition is open to unmarried men, citizens of the United States who are not over 30 years of age. The fellowship carries a cash award to cover all expenses for residence and study at the academy for three years, beginning Oct. 1, with transportation to and from Rome. The fellowship to be awarded is supported by the Daniel H. Burnham Fund. Nine final competitors were selected in the preliminary competition. They are Frederick Theodore Ahlson, Everett Smith Cofran, Carroll Colletti, Charles Dubose, John Edward Miller, Robert Buchanan Mitchell, Earl Chester Morris and Walter Louis Reichardt.

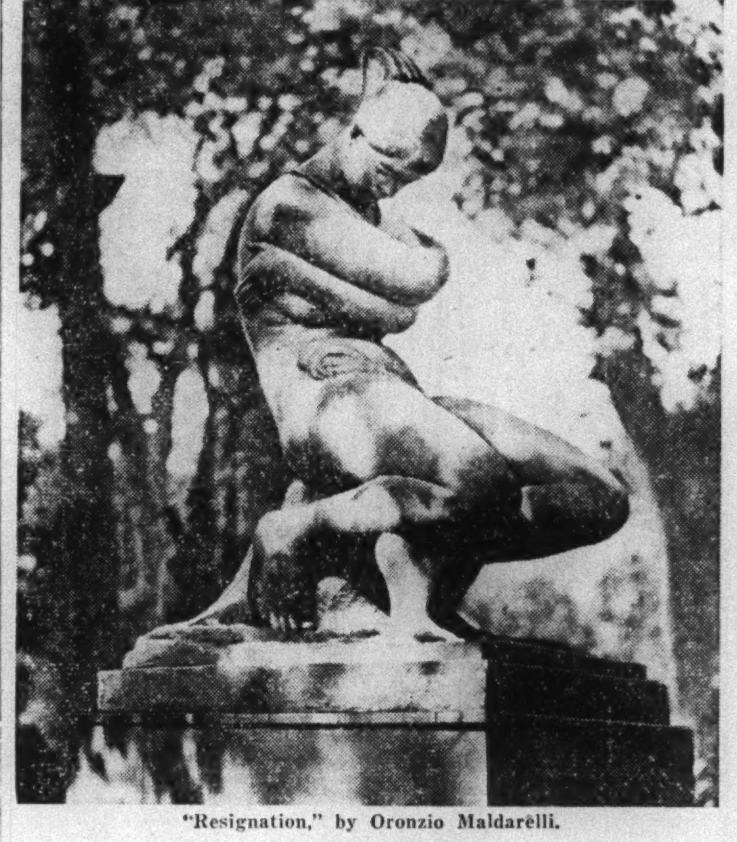
Lorado Taft, sculptor, of Chicago will open the sixth annual exhibition of small sculptures in white soap for the Procter & Gamble prizes on Tuesday, June 3, at 3 o'clock at the American-Anderson Galleries.

At that time prizes will be awarded by the jury of award, consisting of George E. Ball, formerly director of design, the Gorham Company; C. J. Barnhorn, sculptor, Cincinnati Art Museum; Alon Bement, director, Art Centre, New York; Gutzon Borglum, sculptor; Harvey Wiley Corbett, ex-president, Architectural League of New York; Harriet W. Frishmuth, sculptor; Charles Dana Gibson, artist; Leo Lentelli, sculptor; Agnes M. Rindge, Associate Professor of Art, Vassar College; Dr. Gustave Straubenmuller, Associate Superintendent of Schools, New York City, and Lorado Taft, sculptor.

In addition to the cash awards and honorable mentions on the professional and amateur classes, there will be a scholarship award to the senior prize winner whose work, in the opinion of the jury, shows the most promise. This will entitle the winner to a year's study at a leading art school. There will also be the Gorham award of one piece from the entire collection selected by the Gorham Company for reproduction in bronze. Special international prizes will also be awarded.



"Resignation," by Oronzio Maldarelli.

Sculpture Winning $1,000 Award in Fairmount Park Exhibition at Philadelphia.

The exhibition is under the sponsorship of a committee, including Edward C. Blum, president, Brooklyn Museum; Mrs. J. C. Bradford, director, Nashville Museum of Arts, Nashville, Tenn.; R. A. Holland, director, Kansas City Art Institute, Kansas City, Mo.; Charles W. Kollock, president, Charlestown Museum, Charleston, S. C.; Mary L. Alexander, sculptor, Cincinnati, Ohio; Alfred G. Pelikan, director, Milwaukee Art Institute, and supervisor of art, Milwaukee Public Schools, Milwaukee, Wis.; Theodore Hanford Pond, director, Akron Art Institute, Akron, Ohio; Rush Rhees, president, Memorial Art Gallery, Rochester, N. Y., and Evans Woollen, president, Art Association of Indianapolis, Indianapolis, Ind.

The exhibition will continue in New York until June 30, after which it will go on tour of art galleries and museums throughout the country.

Massachusetts.

Announcement is made by the North Shore Art Association of the opening of its eighth annual exhibition July 5 at the galleries in East Gloucester.

Last year in the awarding of prizes the plan followed was having a special jury of non-members. This year the awards will be made by a ballot vote of all the artist members who personally have viewed the exhibition. The prize winners will be announced at the end of July. The Milton Gilbert Davis prize of $100 will be given for the best landscape; the Albert M. Davis prize of $50 for the best portrait or figure painting; $100 for the best marine painting given by Mrs. Mary F. R. Clay and $25 for the best etching, the gift of Epes Merchant.

This year all work submitted will go before a jury composed of Aldro Hibbard, Hugh H. Breckenridge, Bertha Menzler Peyton, Marion P. Sloane, Harry Vincent, Will Davis and Antonio Cirino. The exhibition closes Sept. 6.

GOOD PICTURES IN ROME

Italian Exhibitions Bring Together Two Different Worlds of Contemporary Art

By FRANCIS MONOTTI.

ROME.

BESIDES several one-man shows by such excellent artists as Gino Parin, Giulio Farnese, Lorenzo Gigli and Coronaldi, three large exhibitions have been drawing crowds in Rome this Spring; the centennial show of the Società Amatori e Cultori, the second show of the Sindacato Laziale and the so-called exhibition of the Animale nell'Arte.

The first two mentioned were both housed in the Palazzo dell'Esposizione in Via Nazionale. The Società Amatori e Cultori, wanting to celebrate its hundredth birthday, could not have hit on a better idea than that of bringing together all the best pictures that were shown in its rooms in the course of the ninety-five exhibitions held under its name.

The result is most flattering for the Società. Looking at this collection, it is surprising to find in it so many recognized masterpieces. It can be safely said that the celebrity, and at times even the prosperity, of some of the best Italian painters of the nineteenth century started from works presented for the first time in one of these exhibitions.

"The Iconoclasts" by Domenico Morelli, "The Letter" by Induno, "The Blessing of Houses" by Mosè Bianchi, "The Death of a Chick" by Nono, the portrait of Manzoni by Hayez, some of the exquisite views of London by De Nittis, and a great many other pictures by Appiani, Previati, Fontanesi, Signorini, Palizzi, Michetti, Cremona, Dalbona, Fattori, Lega, &c., are to be found here. Most beautiful of all is "Cows" by Giovanni Segantini, a huge canvas for which, it seems, it has been impossible to find a fully satisfactory position. To be able to admire grouped together so many good pictures, which as a rule can be seen only by traveling the length and breadth of Italy, marks already a great success for this exhibition.

The exhibition of the Sindacato Laziale, showing what the artists of Central Italy have been doing in the last year, is quite another affair. The flight of stairs separating these two collections leads you abruptly into another world. Even from the titles of the pictures hung around the walls it is possible to get an idea of this fact. "The Machines Are Resting," "Electric Treatment," "Flight Impressions," "We Must Shape Our Own Destiny," are only a few of them and point out an ultra-modern spirit which is desperately trying to get hold of a new technique.

It is not always easy to find one's way through the twenty-four rooms and the several hundreds of pieces of this exhibition. In this confusion of tongues and schools the personal shows of single artists of undisputed merit such as G. B. Crema, Tomassi, Geranzani, Giacomo Balla, Ortolani and Francesco Camarda (whose crimson-colored paintings of nudes are attracting a great deal of attention) bring about a little order and continuity.

Antonio Mancini, a veteran who is as eager as ever to fight in the front line; Lorenzo Viani, Enzo Fratelli, and Emilio Sobrero, all exhibit good specimens of their deeply different but sincere arts. Gaudenzi's "The Priest," "A Resting Woman" by Domenico Cucchiari, the portraits by Mafai and Fairbanks, and Carosi's "Portrait of Countess di Robilant," are worthy to be specially mentioned.

Mussolini's strongly marked features are still making the delight of sculptors. After the famous bust of him made by Adolfo Wildt, which may be seen at the Borghese Gallery also in Rome, Aurelio Mistruzzi's marble of "Il Duce" is perhaps the best of the whole series. Ercole Drei's "Footballers," "Flora" by Cataldi, Pepe Diaz's "Woman 1929" and the works by Selva, Canevari, Sheldon and Riccardo Menotti make also a very good impression.

Heine's famous saying, "The more I know man, the more I love animals," could be very well used as the motto of the Animale nell'Arte exhibition held in one of the buildings of the Roman Zoo. It is the first time that such a collection of works of art, devoted exclusively to animals, has been organized in Italy, and its success is already so great as to make everybody wish it to be repeated at regular intervals in the future. Sums of money have been given for scholarships to young artists wanting to study wild animals, and the plan of transforming this into an international show is now being seriously studied.

The most interesting feature of this exhibition is its location. The Roman Zoo has become of late years one of the best of Europe, and it is a great pleasure to be able to pass directly from the sight of the living animals in the open air to the contemplation of their somewhat tamer brethren in the exhibition. Of course also domestic animals swarm all over this show, but their appeal is not so strong. On the contrary, monkeys, antelopes, elephants, and also lions, tigers and leopards—those created by God and those shaped by the hand of an artist—will make you spend a delightful day in their company.

FASHIONS FOR THE GIRL GRADUATE FILL SUMMER NEEDS

WHITE IS STILL THE RULE

But New Lines Provide Variation—Silks, Organdy and Other Cottons Important

WITHIN a very short time, the sound of commencement orators will be heard in the land. Young people will be exposed to the annual torrents of good advice which, alas, they will forget, and will receive impressive diplomas which they will probably lose. The girl graduate, whatever her grades, whatever her confused state of mind over endings and new beginnings, can be sure of graduating with honors in one respect at least—she can be entirely charming in one of the new graduation frocks.

The girl who is finishing high school or preparatory school is the graduate to whom the commencement frock is most important. For younger graduates only the simplest little frocks are permissible, and as for the college girl she is magnificently casual about this matter. As a rule she does not acquire a special frock for Commencement Day. The cap and gown are her emblems of dignity, and beneath the gown she is apt to wear whatever white dress happens to be in her wardrobe. Plain every-day tennis dresses have been known to go a-graduating at some of our most aristocratic Eastern women's colleges.

Class Day is different. At Vassar, for example, the seniors took a vote and chose two Class Day dresses. One is lace trimmed and has a bolero, and the other is the very simple but effective flat crêpe frock sketched in the centre above.

But the graduate in her 'teens is very much concerned these days about the commencement frock itself. She wants one that will carry her triumphantly through the formal exercises of one day—and that will serve her through the Summer as well. Either of the two attractive dresses sketched above would fulfill her desires. The flat crêpe model at the left gains its distinction through a deep bib made in triangular sections, and the repetition of the same theme on the skirt, which is molded at the hip.

For the more formal evening graduation the white lace frock at the right is suggested. It is a very graceful dress, with its deep bolero and uneven skirt that both follow the same dipping lines, and it will go to many a Summer evening party when graduation has become a memory. White brocaded pumps with a small gold buckle at the side would be charming with it.

White, by the way, is still the accepted color for the graduation dress. For all the murmurings about pastels and "rainbow effects," white has kept its prestige as being most appropriate and in the best taste.

The return of organdy to fashion is joyfully hailed by many girl graduates, who love the fresh, crisp youthfulness of this fabric. Point d'esprit, once more a familiar material in the fashion picture, is another favorite. There is also a considerable vogue for cotton net, chiffon and various lawns and dimities. Delectable Summer frocks for young girls are fashioned from all these materials, and one does not have to be a graduate to indulge in the major thrill of a real party dress.

Organdie Without Fuss

THE important thing about the prettiest organdy dresses is their lack of decoration. Grown-ups are wearing organdy, too, but very sophisticated organdy, with intricate cuttings and seamings in the Chanel manner. The most effective junior organdies are simply cut on princess lines, are quite high waisted, have just a suggestion of the bouffant, and frequently boast puff sleeves, and narrow grosgrain ribbons at the waist.

More elaborate, but still in good taste for the young girl are frocks such as the flower-like affair sketched at the left below, of pink taffeta with a bouffant skirt composed of petals of pink net. At the right below is another party dress of net in two shades of green.

THE LONG AND SHORT OF HAIR

The Boyish Bob Is Out—New Coiffures Are Longer, But Preserve Natural Contour of the Head

THE question of long hair versus bob—a hotly argued point these many months—seems no nearer a solution than ever. One young thing vows no hairdresser shall ever be allowed to clip off her locks; another swears eternal loyalty to her bob.

Yet with all this uncertainty in the minds of amateurs, the professionals—the dictators of fashion in clothes, the famous modistes and the hairdressers—have all been gradually working out a compromise between the long and the short "hair-do" and there is no uncertainty in their minds as to its feasibility or its chic. Ask any one just back from Paris what the famous "best dressed" are doing to their hair, or ask any of the leading New York hairdressers. They have made up their minds, and they will tell you, too, that those few women who are first in everything fashionable and who set the pace for all the rest have made up their minds and are acting accordingly.

They will tell you, first of all, that the modern coiffure is just as much a question of individuality as are clothes. There is no one way of dressing the hair that can be made uniform for every woman; for the hair, more than any other one thing, can be arranged to emphasize good features or to disguise less pleasing countenances. Regardless of what nature may have endowed one with in straight or curling tresses, there is assurance that science, artistry, permanent waves or scissors can do something to give a coiffure some touch that makes it lovelier and that makes it more becoming.

The second thing these authorities say is that the compromise between long and bobbed hair is the short-long coiffure or the long-short bob. In other words, long hair as we are accustomed to think of it, is a thing of the past. Knots, coiled ends, and all their kin have gone the way of bustles and hoop skirts, and in their place we have the short-long hair that has been thinned out when necessary, is of about shoulder length and arranged low on the neck in flat, turned-back or tucked-under treatments. In a word, the aim of the long coiffure is always to preserve the natural contour of the head.

Just as really long hair is a thing of the past, so the closely cut, "boyish" type of bob, shingled up the back to reveal the hair line, is definitely out. The hair is longer, both in front and back, so that it is brought back from the face in long, loosely waved effects that look almost the same in front as a long hair-coiffure.

In back, all sorts of new and interesting treatments are possible for bobbed heads. The hair may be cut to just cover the natural hair line at the neck and may be waved to give a long tapering line to the back of the head or to swirl across the back from the long side to the parted side, thus adding breadth to the head. Such treatments as these are eminently suited to the older woman who chooses bobbed hair.

More youthful, and less exacting, is the short-hair coiffure in which the hair reaches about half way to the shoulders and then is waved to roll in soft curls or a continuous roll at the base of the neck. This does not mean the exaggerated Greta Garbo effect, but a trimmer and smaller coiffure. In other arrangements, the curls may be massed further up in the back of the head, and a recent tip from Paris speaks of curls massed just back of the ears, with the hair waved flatly in front.

For those who wish the delights of short hair during the behatted hours, but prefer the more elegant effect of a long coiffure for evening, there is the chignon, which may be attached, and quite safely with the new clips, to the now lengthened bob. This, as a matter of fact, is what all ultra-fashionables recommend, realizing that the difference in our daytime and evening costumes require an accompanying change in the degree of formality with which the hair is dressed.

WHAT THE SMITH COLLEGE GIRLS ARE WEARING

Casual Clothes for Daytime, but Sweeping Skirts and Long Gloves for Evening

NORTHAMPTON, Mass.

SMITH COLLEGE girls are their own fashion arbiters when it comes to deciding what they wear on campus. They like to look smart, but they must be free and untrammeled and the easiest way to achieve the unrestrained is to go in for sweaters, soft shirts and flannel skirts. This is the accepted daytime costume and its color effect is notable, especially now that the lawns and old elms are a rich green and there are enough seniors wearing somber caps and gowns to provide a striking contrast.

The longer skirt for sports wear was slow in finding favor among the college girls at Northampton, but when it did begin to make an appearance there followed a general dropping of hemlines. The popular length is halfway between knee and ankle, and godets, gores and circular effects have entirely superseded pleats.

Sweaters, chukker shirts and sleeveless blouses that are cut down in a V in front are the accepted combination with these sport skirts, which are worn tucked inside the belt, and belts, by the way, are always attached to the skirts, for the reason that college girls have no time to hunt up dress accessories when they are dashing to breakfast with only a minute or two leeway.

The golf shoe or tennis shoe or anything in the way of footwear that has rounded toes and flat heels—and preferably rubber soles—is approved by the Smith girl. She walks a great deal during her college day, if she does not ride a bicycle or drive a car. Only seventy-five out of more than 2,000 are permitted to have their own cars the last part of their senior year; so naturally the bicycle, which is in no way a reward for good standing, is much more popular than the automobile.

But whether it is for driving, "biking" or walking, the white buckskin shoe, with black or brown leather saddle, is the thing. And with it go socks to match the sweater or dress. The sock is a concession to comfort, not solely to fashion. It is much easier on the feet to have something between them and the shoe, and a sock is a pleasant and smart little intermediary. And it does not interfere in any way with the adored sun tan. If a girl prefers not to go bare legged she wears her socks over silk stockings, and the effect is the same.

Coats and hats are unimportant in the life of the girl student. She never wears a hat except when she is going away for the week-end or to a tea or garden party, and a coat is dragged out of her closet only when it is absolutely too cold to go without it. Then it may be a leather jacket, a tailored wool coat or a cotton print.

The students are even more unconcerned about head covering, because weather never makes them swerve an inch from the line that marks the discard of hats. A beret is countenanced, and likewise the silk bandanna which a girl winds around her head in the old-fashioned Southern mammy style. The bandanna has been seen at Smith for two or three years, until it has become a sort of badge; so it cannot be said to have had its inception because of the new long-hair fashion.

Bobs Versus Buns

THE bob is just about holding its own, the bun trying hard to oust it. Buns are a severe style, but the girls like them, and no persuasive voice of a parent can hope to change their lines or intercede for the barber.

Tub dresses, silks and prints are made on simple lines, most of them with sun-tan backs and without sleeves. During the sunniest days these are high favorites, and girls who think their classes and lectures keep them indoors too much find a sunny spot on the campus where they revel in the ultra-violet rays and do a little studying at the same time.

If the free and conventional is the keynote of campus attire, it has no place in the more formal affairs attended by college girls. Smith girls adore sweeping skirts, fluttering draperies, long gloves and floppy hats. They have never had a real chance to put on long dresses, and they welcome the innovation with zest. The longer the dresses and the gloves, the better they like them. It makes them feel and look so grown up and dignified!

Garden Party Costumes

AT a recent garden party there were some exquisite dresses of organdie shading from white at the top to rose or orange or mauve at the bottom. The skirts were as long as they could possibly be for afternoon, and from under them peeped the smartest of pumps with the highest heels. Hats were either great, wide-brimmed garden models trimmed with soft ribbons or flowers, or moderately small ones in a color to match the prevailing tint in their flowered chiffons. Or if it was a lace dress in eggshell or one of the lovely pastel shades the girls love, then the hat was of almost transparent straw in just the same color or deep eggshell with a ribbon or flower of the gown's shade.

They are equally formal and imposing, these girls, when dressed for their own "prom" or to go to a fraternity dance at one of the men's colleges near by. Tight little buns, with hair parted in the middle or at one side and brushed back rather closely; trailing skirts of chiffon or lace, flesh colored gloves reaching almost to the shoulder, and waists that look smaller than they are because of the width of the skirts.

Commencement week, which is one of the liveliest at college, will see many lovely dresses, more Summery than those the girls have been wearing. The selected group of more than one hundred juniors who will bear upon their shoulders the traditional ivy chain, enclosing the file of seniors, are to be in pastel chiffons or other light materials made with half-sleeves or capes. This is an innovation, and the girls have accepted it with enthusiasm.

CHANGES IN LINGERIE

New Foundation Garments and Underthings Adapt Themselves to the Silhouette

IT becomes more and more evident that a smart appearance goes deeper than a fashionable frock. It is not, it seems, what you put on last that completely accounts for a chic, trim figure, but rather all that goes on before. We are faced with the unalterable fact that foundation garments and lingerie must be correct if the final ensemble is to present a truly modern effect.

Accepting the dictates of the day, designers have created exquisite feminine underthings in perfect accord with the subtle and sophisticated lines of current costumes.

Foremost in importance among foundation garments is probably the corselette. It is not by its boning that the modern—and efficient—corselette is known, but rather by its lack of it and by its clever cut and fit that with a minimum amount of bone mold the figure into smooth, flowing lines. The new methods of corseting do not contrive to pinch or squeeze figures into any patterned form; instead they successfully form any figure into its best appearance, cleverly concealing extraneous bulges and recalcitrant rolls.

In girdle form they take care of the requirements of the sports woman; they suit the lines of the frock that is belted or broken at the waistline. In corselette form they provide proper foundation for the princess—or fitted—lines of more formal daytime dresses, and for evening they are smartly de-backed to meet the low décolletage. In materials and in colors they are versatile. Gossamer fabrics are used for featherweight creations that combine foundation garments, panties and brassiere in one article. Sturdier materials are to be had for larger-than-average figures.

So much for corsets. As to the shirts, step-ins, chemises, slips, nightgowns, in the boudoir wardrobe, they are more feminine, more elegant, more meticulously styled to coordinate with outer garments than ever before.

Sheer fabrics are much to the fore. Such materials as ninon, triple voile, washable chiffon, marquisette, sheer dull satins are much used in current lingerie. Flat laces, alençon, binche, valenciennes, point de Paris, malines, are persistent favorites. Appliqués, set on with drawn work, such as point Turc, are in great vogue.

The important business—or perhaps it should be termed art—of conforming the various articles of under-apparel to the lines of the figure and of the silhouette, is now a matter of intricate cut. Waists are indicated or nipped in, fullness provided without resource to gathering strings, elastics or bulky pleats. Pleats when they do appear are fine and flat. Circular cut is used to preserve flat lines for waist and hips and provide necessary fullness at hemlines. Yoke tops are employed to fit step-ins and petticoats to the figure. Inverted tucks nip in the waistlines of slips.

New Peach Tone

Color is being used to a considerable extent—nothing of a flamboyant nature, of course, but delicate and charming pastels. Paris favors particularly a peach shade that borders on a skin tone. Flesh pink, ivory white, eggshell, pale yellow, pale green, pale blue, are all receiving due attention. With these colors, laces are frequently tinted to match.

Probably the nightgown, more than any other garment in the field, reflects the styles of the times most exactly. In its return to flowing length, it incorporates all the classic loveliness that is evident in current evening fashions. Little puff sleeves, as presented by Irene Dana, Norman Hartnell and other couturieres in youthful frocks, grace the nightgown mode. Short trains, such as those endorsed by M. Patou for his more regal creations, lend stateliness to many a nightgown. Frequently this garment forms the nucleus of a boudoir ensemble that includes negligee, sheets and pillow slips.

NEW FAVORITES IN PARIS FASHIONS

Plain Smooth Surfaces Replacing Rough Spotty Ones—Men's Suitings Featured

PARIS.

NOW that all the Paris couturiers have shown their midseason collections, one is able to draw up a more accurate sartorial chart of the style currents for the guidance of smart women the world over. There is a very strong tendency to unify the mode, to eliminate eccentricities and exaggerations, with the result that there will be a greater number of costumes easily wearable by the majority of women.

The first big change indicated by the midseason is the passing of tweeds as we know them. The overwhelming popularity of plain colored velvets—stiff and supple pile velvet, satin velvet and velveteen—for Fall and Winter, points unerringly toward a future of plain, smooth surfaces instead of rough, spotty ones. A new kind of serge—with the diagonal of serge but with a smoother, softer texture—Poiret twills, duvetyn, wool velours, broadcloth and thick soft woolens are fast replacing tweeds for everything but active sports. Vionnet's piece-dyed tweeds reduced the one-time speckled fabric to a plain unified color. This does not mean that there are no tweeds in the new collections, but they show closer weaves and finer patterns, so that often they might be mistaken for other fabrics.

Jean Patou features men's suitings in smooth, fine chevron weaves and invisible diagonal stripes for his new-tailored things. His strictly sport costumes are of thick velvety jersey; soft, fine diagonals and broadcloths are used for afternoon. The men's suitings are, in fact, one of the decided novelties of the midseason. They are very prominent with Lucille Paray, Worth likes them, and Martial et Armand; and they appear in greater or less proportion at Leniefs, Maggy Rouff's, O'Rossen's and in other houses.

Plain, rich colors will replace printed materials to a great extent in the formal mode. Patou's new prints resemble colored engravings or batiks more than conventional prints. They are composed in flowing marble-like designs rather than in definite broken up patterns. Augustabernard makes nearly all her evening gowns of heavy, plain pile velvet or satin. Lelong's plain velvet evening frocks with plain faille coats are the smartest models in his collection. Vionnet has, momentarily at any rate, completely eliminated prints, and Chanel is showing fewer prints.

Another striking example of the unifying trend is the shortening of evening hemlines. Even Patou, for so long the patron of trails and trains, shows a number of evening gowns that stop eight or nine inches from the floor. Chanel is raising her hemlines, especially in the front. Some of Vionnet's evening dresses are distinctly short. Several of Louiseboulanger's evening hems are nine inches from the ground, as well as a few of Augustabernard's. As daytime skirts are imperceptibly lengthening, it looks as though evening and daytime hems might soon be the same length.

Evening Wraps Longer

COAT hems also tend to rejoin skirt hems. Though there are still many short evening jackets in the collections, significant creators are favoring evening coats as long, at least somewhere, as the frocks they cover. Worth shows long velvet evening coats trimmed with fur. Lelong and Patou both complete the silhouette of their evening gowns with graceful evening coats showing just a little of the frock.

The one-piece dress and coat or jacket will be smarter for Fall and Winter than the suit and separate blouse, though the latter will continue popular during the Summer months. The new frocks often give the effect of being a blouse or tunic and skirt, because their tops are made in a light, contrasting color; actually they are almost always sewed together. Generally, they are either sleeveless or have the short sleeves so successfully launched this Spring.

WOMAN VERSUS MAN: A FRENCH VIEWPOINT

Lucien Romier Reviews Her Ascendancy and Expects Her to Alter the Present Balance

LUCIEN ROMIER, distinguished French writer on social questions, has recently completed a study of the position of woman in present-day society. In the following article he discusses her future, what he calls her intellectual ascendancy over the mentally worn-out male and her responsibility for seeing that culture does not entirely perish.

By LUCIEN ROMIER.

AMONG the civilized peoples of the white race, the future of woman seems likely to be determined by a veritable revolution which will upset familiar and once well-established customs and completely alter the balance between the sexes as regards opportunities and social advantages. This prospective revolution must be considered from the economic and social, from the intellectual and from the emotional aspects, as well as in relation to the family.

The feminist revolution is in process of realization. It follows the same general lines in Europe and in America. But in America it seems destined to take place more quickly and more freely, because the American is not troubled by caste or class prejudices or jealously guarded traditions, as the European is. Consequently, feminism does not meet with the same resistance, either local or national.

By multiplying the number of jobs open to women in factories, offices, shops and in all varieties of the arts, material progress has emancipated woman by supplying her with many easy alternatives to domestic life as a means of livelihood.

The Feminine Rush to Work.

Far from diminishing, the rush of feminine multitudes to the work which liberates them increases every day. The number of professional schools for girls and women grows at a surprising rate in the countries of Western Europe. In France the girls taking examinations to qualify themselves for teaching in the secondary schools are already almost as numerous as the men, and soon will outnumber the men. But this army of ambitious women has not yet made its pressure felt upon the labor market.

The women who are employed in great numbers today represent an ill-equipped and relatively inconsiderable group, compared with those who in the near future will compete with the men for jobs. As the girls' schools increase throughout the world, as equal education for the two sexes begins to have its full effect, the economic rôle of woman will rapidly enlarge and we shall face a problem of social adaptation which it will be impossible to solve on the basis of the present customs. It is in this way without doubt that society will change most profoundly. Even among the Mohammedan peoples—for example, in Egypt and in the French possessions in North Africa—native girls flock to the schools to receive a technical instruction which will prepare them for an economic life of their own.

While increasingly powerful forces over the whole world are urging women more and more to seek to escape domestic subjection by work outside the home, they are more fully realizing the advantages offered by such a course. Feminine opinion, becoming conscious of its collective power, tends toward a more precise assertion of the rights and independence of woman. To appreciate the extent of the change that has taken place, one must remember that women began to undertake non-domestic labor under pressure of necessity, whereas today they leave their homes to get jobs, not merely because they are obliged to do so, but often because they prefer to do so. Moreover, the feminist movement, which for a long time was superficial and not quite respectable, appears now to have definitely become an enormous, coherent and self-conscious force.

In Germany 11,500,000 women are employed outside the domestic sphere, and 7,000,000 of them are single. In France 4,000,000 are so employed, not counting the peasants. Even in Russia the Bolshevist revolution, by rendering the life of families and individuals more precarious, forces nearly all the girls in the towns to seek to become independent by acquiring a trade.

Competing With Men.

The broad movement which is gaining for women a place in the labor market equal to that of men will be reinforced increasingly by the transformations taking place in industry, commerce and social life. Many of us can remember when the labor of woman was sought only for domestic service, special trades like needlework and relatively easy jobs like that of saleswomen in shops. Today this is entirely changed. The work of women has acquired a broader economic value, which causes them to find themselves competing with men in innumerable occupations, because women often are better suited to certain new types of labor and their services often are cheaper than those of men. The continued rise in women's wages in the last thirty years reflects this growing demand for their labor.

To form some conception of the new opportunities which will open more and more for feminine labor, one has only to take account of all the new inventions and the new industrial processes of present-day society which effect a saving of muscular effort by substituting mechanical force for human energy, and which consequently make many varieties of work less fatiguing. The decisive superiority of the man over the woman in the past was due essentially to his muscular superiority.

As the perfection of machinery reduces the need for sheer muscular force in a given occupation, it is at once invaded by female labor which offers an irresistible competition to male workmen. For instance, women have gradually taken the place of men in the textile mills. They have become chauffeurs. Even such jobs as those of the traveling salesman, which once were regarded as among the most strenuous, are opening up to women as travel becomes more comfortable. There is no doubt that in ten or twenty years only a relatively few types of work will remain the exclusive preserve of men—rough manual jobs or occupations calling for powers of physical resistance which are beyond the capacity of women.

This great change will create grave problems, which specialists should be already studying. First of all, it is obvious that the labor market will undergo a profound change. In many civilized countries today the male workmen demand that their governments protect their wage rates against the competition of foreign immigrants who are willing to work for cheap wages. Such protection can be effective against the foreign immigrant, but it is ineffective against the domestic competition offered by female labor.

A Class of French Women Who Are Studying Electricity in Competition With Men.

It is not so much a question of the level of wages as of the distribution of the available jobs. Nearly all the great industrial nations are suffering from unemployment. In some of them, as in England and Germany, millions of male workers are out of work or threatened with idleness. It is easy to see the disquieting effect upon employment in these countries if male workmen lose further ground to the women, who invade new industrial spheres and take classes of jobs formerly preempted by men.

If we are to avoid a social conflict between men and women in the labor market, which might become serious, we must begin methodically to direct female labor into new fields in such a way as to increase our economic resources without developing competition for the jobs filled by male labor.

This would involve a change in the feminist movement itself. Until now women too often have gone into industry and trade by following in the path of the men and imitating them. Instead of creating a special rôle for themselves and bringing about the development of jobs which would have supplemented those of men, they have invaded the field of male labor at random and at lower wages. Thus the feminine newcomers suffer in masculine opinion from the fact that they raise up the spectre of superfluous competition.

Woman will not attain a genuine equality with man in imitating his work or emulating his aspirations or adopting methods designed by man to fit the masculine temperament. She will gain professional equality only if she creates for herself—as man has done—work, aspirations and methods which equal those of man, not by resembling them but by their general utility. In the measure that woman becomes conscious of her economic identity—of her special rôle in economic life, in relation to that of man—she will advance to new conquests and enlarge both her gains and her usefulness.

But such a success is possible only if woman ceases to be the pupil of man and ceases to expect from him an instruction which—by definition—he is not qualified to give. Even in the economic sphere, woman must be her own teacher and her own leader. She must work out herself a general scheme of professions, trades and types of work which are specifically feminine. No group ever realized its aspirations without defining and directing them.

The time now seems to be approaching when woman will once more exert a social and intellectual influence such as she exerted in the centuries of cultural fruitfulness and maturity. She will regain this influence because the male mind, fatigued by long inventive effort, has need of a pause and of the opportunity to examine its own victories—somewhat like the primitive huntsman who throws his quarry at the door of the hut and leaves to the women the task of turning it into food for the tribe.

In fact, we may discern in our time a sort of fatigue of the masculine thinking faculties, an indifference toward the fundamental things of life and a disposition to make the most of what has been gained without bothering about its origin or its significance. The man of the twentieth century manifests this mental difference from the man of the nineteenth century; he seeks regeneration no longer as a discovery, but as an enjoyment. He has passed the point of being tormented by doubt and is actuated only by fear of boredom and the ambition to add to his comforts. Amid the artificial movement with which it has surrounded itself the masculine mind is content to contemplate the disordered multiplicity of the spectacle and of its own satisfactions.

Woman and Civilization.

Thus the time has come when woman must insure the flowering of a true civilization by judging and sifting into intellectual values. She alone is capable today of saving culture within the family and outside it. Masculine culture soon will be limited to the practical undertakings which lead the individual to material success and riches. If this tendency should triumph over all others it would deprive our civilization of at least half its advantages. This woman may prevent.

Woman is curious by instinct, by taste and from vanity. She takes an interest in many things of an artistic or idealistic nature from which the ordinary man turns away the moment he sees that they offer no material profit. She has the intuition of moral values and an innate esteem for them. Finally, she is capable of love, or rather of devotion, toward that which interests her. A man finds among other men only rivals and jealous competitors. But a woman fulfills her function the moment she devotes herself to something, though it be to an esthetic extremist. Women of distinction are constantly discovering new pianists, new painters, new philosophers and new novelists, just as they discover new ways of dressing or of arranging their hair. All these qualities excellently equip woman to maintain communications between the thinkers, scholars and artists and the rest of the world.

She exerts her influence, first of all, by the direct education of her children in the home and by the counsel she gives to her husband or companion. Outside the home the intellectual influence of woman makes itself felt by means of the privilege which she always enjoys—but principally in a society in which masculine culture is on the decline—and of choosing between the works submitted to public judgment and deciding which shall acquire a lasting reputation.

It is precisely in this sphere that the growing influence of feminine opinion encounters, in practice, the least resistance on the part of male prejudice. There is scarcely a writer or artist who does not seek the approval of the women and fear their criticism.

Since the intellectual culture of the average man is rapidly declining, while that of woman is rising, feminine ascendency will not be long in coming. It has already come in the countries where economic competition so absorbs the energies and the minds of men as to exclude all disinterested curiosity. In the United States, in England, in Germany, in the industrial regions of France and Italy—with the exception of university circles and the intellectual professions—woman, in general, is more cultivated than man. This feminine cultural superiority is particularly notable in the younger generation.

Today it would be futile to attempt to limit the activity of the girls in civilized countries to that of waiting for husbands. For the girls of today, love has lost none of its attraction and marriage is still valued. But a whole set of conventional attitudes and a whole system of sentimental circumspection are becoming obsolete because the profound difference of position that once existed between men and women has passed.

Change and Its Consequences.

This change may lead to something better or to something worse. Like all such changes, it calls for adaptation and consequently for a reform in education. It brings more light to bear upon everything pertaining to love. This may encourage both cynicism and honesty. If the education of the sexes should henceforth substitute the teaching of uprightness in regard to the affections in place of the illusions and the calculated modesty of the past, it is difficult to see that sexual morals in particular or social morals in general would suffer. There is reason to believe that both would gain a great deal.

The present evolution of social customs, which reflects material evolution, makes it more difficult to resort to artifice or dissimulation in courtship. Boys and girls associate from adolescence onward on a basis of familiarity which attenuates the mystery of sex and the effects of unhealthy imagination. At the same time, by reason of the fact that boys and girls become better acquainted than formerly, each receives credit for his personal qualities.

The intellectual and social advance of woman inevitably involves new demands from the point of view of her personality. There are today hundreds of thousands of girls and young women who have been educated in the colleges, universities and great technical schools, and among them are many who have attained a high level of intellectual culture. There are millions of school teachers, secretaries and employes, and there are destined to be more still. They all associate with men whose minds often are less cultivated than their own. It is inconceivable that these girls and women should regard their eventual marriage as a necessary subjection which they cannot and must not question.

Woman and the Family.

The family is not menaced as a natural fact. There is only one really serious danger for the family of the future: the danger that the woman, being better educated, will be less susceptible to enduring illusions as to the attractions and the virtues of the more or less mediocre man whom she will marry. If the number of women who remain single by choice increases today, the reason is that the woman of our time is more exacting and more readily disillusioned. This is indicated, too, by the growing number of divorces, most of which arise from feminine disappointment.

The fact remains that modern marriage tends to go to pieces because of feminine discontent, women having gained more opportunities of living independently and having got over the habit of blindly resigning themselves to their fate.

As a consequence of economic progress, marriage has ceased to be—from the material point of view—the only normal manner of life to which woman can look forward. Henceforth, whether it is a question of contracting such a union or of maintaining it, marriage—for the woman, as for the man—will be a matter of choice—of choice between independence and conjugal affection, between free work and maternity, between devotion to a family and devotion to a career. The woman's choice will vary more and more according to her temperament and her personal inclinations. It will vary also according to the merits and attractions of the man who presents himself.

Thus it cannot be said that the future of the family will depend upon the habits of the woman. It will depend quite as much, if not more, upon the effort which the man will make to win the woman and to keep her.

MANY JEWELERS NOW HAVE SHOPS ABOVE THE LEVEL OF THE STREET

MORE and more, important jewel merchants are to be found high up in New York's newer office buildings, in richly furnished suites of small rooms that are entirely without the glamour of a glittering window display. For a window display in a street-level shop, some have found, is not the magnet it was once thought to be. Few important clients, it is said, are drawn into a shop from among the thousands of casual passers-by. Those who are attracted out of the streets are often in the mood to ask prices but not to buy.

The clientele of a reputable retail jewelry establishment possesses, it seems, an unusual buying psychology which practically no other retail merchant has to take into consideration. In the first place, jewels of any great value are seldom, if ever, bought on the whim of a moment. One goes about such a purchase with a considerable degree of deliberateness. The customer wants time to make a choice, and, above all, the utmost in privacy.

A prospective bride, for instance, going out with her mother to buy a tea service or flat silver, is said to dislike intensely having a number of people, or even one curious outsider, looking on while she makes up her mind between a Georgian and a modern pattern. A client paying a high price for a string of pearls, a diamond bracelet or an emerald has quite understandable reasons for not wanting the person on the street to have an inkling of his new possession. And the buying of a wedding ring—this was probably true of the first wedding ring ever sold—is done with a fumbling reticence which is unmistakable.

To the retail jeweler, however, the psychology of his clientele is something in the nature of an economic boon, for a suite in an office building can be handsomely fitted out and maintained at considerably less expenditure than a street-level shop.

PORTLAND MAKES READY FOR ITS ROSE FESTIVAL

Annual Carnival of Flowers in the Oregon City Includes Air Circus Among New Features

IN its annual twofold homage to the roses, for which it is famous, Portland, Ore., is again making ready for its rose festival and the rose show which are to be held simultaneously at the close of the second week in June.

Each year Portland feels that it is increasingly fitting for her to take anew an oath of fealty to the rose. She is proud to be known as the Rose City and to have the flower stand as a symbol for the city, nationally and even internationally. The city has become a rose centre for the United States, and tribute to her leadership in rose culture has been attested in the establishment of the International Rose Test Garden in Washington Park. Here some of the most famous varieties in the world are studied and tested before being officially introduced to the public.

The rose takes on additional significance in Portland, moreover, because rose culture is a very important factor in the industrial life of the whole Willamette Valley. And the rose festival, furthermore, comes at the beginning of the vacation season, when the tide of tourist traffic begins to come in throughout the Northwest. And this year, taking all these into consideration, the city proposes to outdo any previous festivals and shows of the whole twenty years since the pageant began.

Although the rose festival now overshadows the rose show as an event, the show is older. This year will be the forty-third, while the festival was first held in 1907 and—except for 1918 and 1926—the city has annually halted its busy life in temporary acknowledgement that it is a subject of the "empire of rosaria."

Beginning as a purely local affair, the festival and show have become major events of the Pacific Coast region. In its early days the principal events were a parade by day of horse-drawn vehicles decorated with roses and a night parade of floats mounted on street car trucks beautifully decorated and illuminated. The motor car has, of course, supplanted other vehicles; and now floats that are literally huge massed floral pieces are entered in the parade from cities all over the Pacific Slope, in competition for the sweepstakes and for the divisional prizes. The high quality of the floats is maintained by a rigid standard of qualifications which are enforced by the board of judges before a float is admitted to the pageant.

The festival formally opens with the coronation of Queen Caroline in Laurelhurst Park amid the giant Douglas firs, centuries old. The Queen is elected from among their own number by the candidates of the city's eight high schools. Her majesty, after opening the rose show at the official auditorium, reviews 10,000 school children in dances and drills in the great civic auditorium.

The Festival Program.

On the evening of the first day of the festival, June 12, activities are to centre in the harbor. Ocean-going craft and tiny canoes alike, decorated with colored lanterns, are to pass in review before the throngs on the new seawall and the wharves. The Willamette River, passing through the heart of the city, provides a natural stage for the aquatic display and regatta. An illuminated demonstration of the city's fleet of fireboats in action, together with a pyrotechnic display, closes the day.

Disregarding Friday and 13, the activities of the next day are to open with an air circus at Swan Island Airport, in the very heart of the city. Fliers from all the coast region will take part and squadrons of planes are to represent the army and navy. The circus will serve as a formal dedication of the airport's new passenger depot and will continue throughout the day with a demonstration of stunt flying and a night display.

The true feature of the rose festival is the floral parade of the afternoon. Sixteen sections have been arranged for this year's event. One of this year's innovations is the inclusion in the floral parade of the parade of the nations, sponsored in other years by the International Club of Portland. The entries represent fifteen nations, the floats carrying out the national idea, and the marchers and attendants being in national costume.

Children Take Part.

The participation of school children in both the festival and the rose show has been emphasized and the parade of rosebuds, a feature of other years, is being restored to the floral parade this year in accordance.

The night of the second day will be turned over to the merrymakers to celebrate in the true carnival spirit. Bands will be stationed at intervals throughout the business centre of the city to furnish music for dancing in the streets. Dancers are requested to come in costume, but not masked. Fireworks and all the din of carnival noise-making devices will be welcomed. Chinatown will keep open house, with the residents in gala costumes.

Nor will the official close of the festival bring the celebration to an end. On Saturday and Sunday the many fine gardens of Portland will be open to public inspection and a final judging of exhibits will be held at the rose show on Sunday afternoon.

The rose show, held under the auspices of the Portland Rose Society and affiliated with the American Rose Society, the Royal Rosarians and the Portland Rose Festival, serves to introduce the new roses of the year. These are on display at the municipal auditorium, if they have won the approval of the International Rose Test Garden, and they are duly named at this time. The Bloomfield Trophy is awarded and a special section for school children, which has stimulated rose culture among the young, is a feature.

LINES ABANDON NIGHT SAILINGS

The Decision of Certain Companies Is Due To Difficulties

By DOROTHY WOOLF.

A DECIDED change awaits many ocean voyagers this Summer, for several of the larger steamship companies have recently announced that they will avoid night sailings as far as possible. In the last few years midnight departures have become a feature of the vogage eagerly anticipated by many of those about to set sail for Europe.

They were instituted as an experiment two or three years ago by companies whose new express liners could leave New York twelve hours later than they had left customarily and still arrive on the other side in the early morning. Other lines, realizing that leaving at night added a certain element of novelty to the trip, adopted the same sailing hour.

There are many reasons for the popularity of a steamer sailing at night. Many of the passengers are not residents of New York. To them it affords an extra day in the city, which can be spent in sight-seeing and shopping. Sometimes the midnight sailing saves a night at a hotel. For the resident business man, to whom time is money and who is crossing the ocean just to close some deal, it means an unbroken working day. For some people, too, it provides an excuse for a farewell party.

The glamour of leaving New York at night is undoubted; there is a certain fascination in sailing down the murky river, watching the lights of the tall buildings fade into the blackness, and in waking up the next morning with nothing but the ocean about the ship.

Glamour of Night Sailings.

To the steamship companies which do not actually save time in their schedules by night sailings, there is at least publicity value. More people can inspect the ship at night, and records show that many passengers have decided to sail on a particular line because they witnessed the departure of one of its ships.

For there is no doubt that even the most gorgeous of the new floating palaces looks more wonderful under the glow of thousands of electric lights, its saloons and reading rooms filled with men and women in evening dress, the orchestra playing, the officers and crew in uniform suddenly looming up out of the darkness outside as they walk past a hidden light. The open decks, the swaying life boats, the little out-of-the-way corners with couples in earnest conversation, all add a touch of romance.

But despite all this, the novelty of late sailings is beginning to wear off and the advertising value has been considerably lessened in the past year. Certain other factors have developed which counterbalance the advantages.

Popular as the midnight sailing is, some people have complained about it. Preparations for departure have been strenuous. There has been packing, sometimes there has been a long train journey. Those who wish to go to bed and rest as soon as they get on the steamer are unable to sleep because of the noise of parties among the other passengers. It is difficult to make deck chair and table reservations.

Confusion as to Date.

Moreover, there has been a great deal of uncertainty caused by the fact that the tickets are stamped 12 M. with a certain date. Passengers arrive before noon of the day previous and the day following the actual sailing, while many who are not misled by the ticket are carried away by their amusements ashore and often arrive with scarcely enough time to look after the many presailing formalities. Some actually get left—a few.

To avoid mistakes in time, one line has changed its sailing hour to 12:30 A. M., but this does not do away with the late arrivals who, under the impression that they have plenty of time, reach the pier as the gangplank is about to be pulled away.

Besides these disadvantages, the crowds, at first welcomed, have now grown so that they are a problem in themselves, for they hinder the necessary routine on the pier and on the ship, and additional guards are required to keep order. The number of visitors who have friends aboard is swelled by many who have none. Some are curious to see and anxious to be seen; others regard the large liners as free night clubs.

Prominent passengers are continually annoyed by amateur photographers and autograph hunters who use the boat as a field in which to gather their treasures. The light-fingered gentry has found the ships a happy hunting ground, so that passengers are unable, without danger, to leave overcoats in unguarded cabins for even a few moments. While the companies take every precaution to prevent bootlegging, nevertheless the stewards are beset by persons who have heard rumors that they can procure liquor, and failing this, intrude thmselves on private parties, demanding a drink of any one who looks promising.

Liquor is, of course, taken aboard by passengers and their friends and increases the difficulties of the company, for many take so much that inadvertent stowaways fall asleep in lounges and unoccupied cabins, while the would-be stowaways, profiting by the crowds and confusion, have an easier time in escaping immediate detection.

Effect on Efficiency.

Besides this, it is felt by some lines that the night sailing affects the efficiency of the service, for the stewards, having worked all day cleaning the vessel, must carry heavy luggage aboard and settle passengers in their cabins up to the time the gangway is removed. After the boat sails they must then clear away the litter left by the crowds, so that it is early morning before the public rooms are put to rights and the last errand has been run.

There is confusion in the office, too. The hundreds of baskets of flowers and fruit, the countless telegrams and bon voyage letters must be sorted and distributed, if possible, before sailing time.

In some cases economy also has motivated the change to daylight sailings. On this side of the water the midnight departure is enormously more expensive, because every one from the porters on the dock to the pilot who takes the ship out has to be paid overtime wages. At the European end the customs and immigration officials do not start their work before 8 o'clock in the morning.

Accordingly, the schedules are now being arranged so that ships are leaving New York at an hour which brings them to Europe in the morning or early afternoon. Slower boats which formerly departed at midnight—regardless of their speed and solely because the line found it a popular sailing time—are being held over till early morning. Naturally, certain of the express liners which cross in five and a half days and the slower boats which take eight and a half or nine and a half days will continue to sail at midnight. But midnight will no longer be so general a sailing hour.

AN AUXILIARY LANGUAGE VIEWED AS A NEW NEED

An American Advocate, Back From Geneva, Reports Progress at Conference

THE world is seeking an auxiliary language to lead it out of the complexities created by the new forms of international communication that have come into being in recent years. "The question of a secondary language is gaining ever wider attention, both here and abroad, said Mrs. Dave H. Morris, honorary secretary of the International Auxiliary Language Association, who recently returned from the meeting of linguistic research held in Geneva. Eighteen experts, representing eight countries, exchanged ideas at this meeting on the importance of finding a synthetic language most suited to world needs, and of unifying their interests and efforts to promote it.

Among them were exponents of six rival international languages—Esperanto, Ido, Nov-esperanto, Occidental, Novial and Latin without inflections. The presiding officer was Professor Otto Jespersen of Denmark, author of Novial. The meeting was held at the suggestion of the International Auxiliary Language Association.

"It is the opinion of all connected with the conference that it was the most important of the kind ever held," said Mrs. Morris. "For the first time so many distinguished linguists and interlinguists with divergent interests met amicably to discuss the need of one auxiliary language to serve as a common means of translating and expressing world thought. At the conclusion of the conference all declared that they considered it desirable that interlinguists work on a basis of understanding, regardless of any particular system, and that they cooperate in the study of problems common to them all."

For half a century experts have been inventing languages — about forty-five in all. The idea came from Descartes and Leibnitz. Of the many new systems, two are outstanding successes—Esperanto and Ido. The former is the more widely used. At least 750,000 experts speak it, according to Mrs. Morris, who has been devoting herself to investigations in this field for ten years. It is used extensively by labor organizations in Europe, and is being taught to pupils from 8 to 18 years of age in more than 700 schools in thirty-seven countries. While Esperanto has been the most popular of the manufactured languages all linguistic experts do not concede that it should be used to the exclusion of all others.

American Language Interest.

"While America as a whole is not interested in the promotion of a neutral language, because language complications do not exist here as they do abroad," continued Mrs. Morris, "very active interest in experimental and research work is shown in some of the larger educational centres, working in close cooperation with the International Auxiliary Language Association, commonly spoken of as the IALA. It advocates the development and establishment of one neutral language, secondary to all national languages and in conflict with none. It can be readily understood that the mother tongue of one nation will never be accepted by the rest of the world as a common medium.

MRS. DAVE H. MORRIS

Honorary Secretary, International Auxiliary Language Association.

The IALA is basically a research organization, explained Mrs. Morris. Its activities are divided into three groups—sociological research, directed by Herbert N. Shenton, head of the department of sociology of Syracuse University; linguistic research, under the direction of Mrs. Morris, and educational research headed by Stephen P. Dugan, director of the Institute of International Education. The association is working for governmental recognition of the language problem and the creation of an international commission of experts to study it and present to the governments of the world such auxiliary language as they deem suitable for official adoption.

In America the IALA is working in conjunction with the Institute of Educational Research at Teachers College, where Professor Edward L. Thorndike is conducting a research in the psychology of the learning of an auxiliary language.

OLD FAVORITES ARE STILL READ

Selected Library for the White House Shows Steady Demand

THE ten best books to take to a desert island have been chosen many times in accordance with the individual tastes of those who made the selections. Possibly more than one list of "ten best books" might be compiled from the list of titles found in the library of 500 volumes recently presented to the White House by the American Booksellers Association. At all events, the White House library is an illuminating commentary on what the booksellers believe to be the books people would choose to read.

Ancient and modern books are included in the White House library in a general proportion. It would be difficult to find a more thoroughly average list. Chaucer's "Canterbury Tales," Dante's "Divine Comedy," Homer's "Odyssey," Shakespeare's plays and Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" appear with Dickens's "David Copperfield," Thackeray's "Vanity Fair," Eliot's "Adam Bede," Wells's "Tono-Bungay" and Mark Twain's "Tom Sawyer." Voltaire's "Candide" and Malory's "Morte d'Arthur" have been omitted. But Mr. Hoover and future Presidents will be able to read "Cardigan" by Robert W. Chambers and "A President Is Born" by Fannie Hurst.

What, according to librarians, publishers and authorities on bookselling, are the most popular individual volumes and classes of books today?

The circulation department of the New York Public Library possesses more than 1,200,000 books, and these volumes circulate at the rate of some 10,000,000 a year, passing through as wide a diversity of hands as one can see in watching the crowds that go through the library doors. They form the most thorough index of what is read today. And though the men and women who minister to that unending stream of readers agree that the demand for copies of "Pilgrim's Progress" is perhaps not too overpowering to cope with today, the demand for many of the standard books of the past grows rather than diminishes.

The story is told that a man looking for a copy of the "Meditations of Marcus Aurelius" was annoyed to find none on the shelves. He told a library attendant that he supposed that was too erudite a book for a public library to stock. As a matter of fact, the attendant informed him regretfully, the reason he could not find a copy on the shelf was because all the fifteen copies of the book that the library owned were out being read.

No record is kept at the Public Library of what books are most widely read, but the fact that the books on hand are all read is sufficiently proved by the constant business done by the bindery, where romance grown shopworn, realism in tatters, poetry with its stanzas falling apart and drama in need of new unity are constantly being remade to go out into the reading world again.

Books That Are Still Bought.

Turning from the point of view of the librarians to the publishers, it is interesting to find that the popularity of the standard works of the past among those who buy books is not less than among those who borrow them.

Here are the ten best sellers in the Everyman's Library, a series of reprints that includes most of the famous works of the past:

"Vanity Fair."
"Joseph Andrews," by Fielding.
Shakespeare's Plays.
Dante's "Divine Comedy."
"Pride and Prejudice," by Jane Austen.
William James's "Selected Papers on Philosophy."
Thackeray's "Henry Esmond."
Dickens's "Great Expectations."
Malory's "Morte d'Arthur."
Ibsen's "The Doll's House."

Many of those books are bought by students, so that the popularity of some of the books in the list may be largely ascribed to the requirements of reading courses. But here is a list of ten best sellers in a more modern series, the Modern Library:

Samuel Butler's "The Way of All Flesh."
"The Three Musketeers."
Melville's "Moby Dick."
Dostoyevsky's "The Brothers Karamazov."
Voltaire's "Candide."
Pepys's Diary.
The Autobiography of Benvenuto Cellini.
Sterne's "Tristram Shandy."
Hardy's "The Return of the Native."
Meredith's "Diana of the Crossways."

Frederick Melcher, an editor of The Publishers' Weekly, spoke first of the constantly changing taste of the reading world.

Classics in a New Light.

"Of course, it is always the thing to say that the old is out," Mr. Melcher remarked, "and perhaps there has been a subsidence of interest in the classics. What has happened, I believe, is that there has been a re-evaluation of what classic is. A classic is a book that continuing generations demand. A book may be a masterpiece and yet not a classic under this definition, you see. The classics used to mean such authors as Eliot, Thackeray, Dickens, Scott, Bulwer, Brontë, Jane Austen. Now, in the re-evaluation that has gone on during the past ten years some of these authors have dropped. Bulwer has dropped clear out of sight, for instance.

"In place of these, such authors as Kipling, Conrad, Melville and Galsworthy have come up. Melville has come up a great deal. "Moby Dick" was not read ten years ago very much. Then it was taken up. Now it has become one of the classics that is widely read."

In non-fiction and drama there have been interesting revivals, Mr. Melcher pointed out. Pepys's "Diary" was cited as an example, as well as the works of Rabelais, the "Autobiography" of Benvenuto Cellini and Boswell's "Life of Johnson." In poetry, he said, there are always subsidences and revivals under way. There is a notable revival of poetry as far as popular reading goes today. "Browning has suffered," he said. "So has Byron and Wordsworth."

"Blake has gained tremendously. Keats and Shelley are as widely read as ever. Poe, too. The New England poets have lost ground. Whitman is steadily growing in demand and in the sale of his books. The poetry anthologies are constantly increasing. Both in England and in America today there are poets who have proved that poetry can be merchandised—Masefield, Frost, Robinson and Edna St. Vincent Millay are among these."

Asked what ten books he thought were most read in America today, Mr. Melcher made the following tentative list, excluding from his consideration school sales:

"The Adventures of Tom Sawyer," "David Copperfield," Poe's Tales, "The Three Musketeers," The Autobiography of Benvenuto Cellini, Wells' "Outline of History," Keats's Poems, Emerson's Essays, "Vanity Fair," Dickens's "Christmas Carol," "Alice in Wonderland."

Frank Parker Stockbridge, director of the Library Information Service and a member of the American Library Association, who compiles monthly scores of the current books most widely read, made off-hand the following tentative list of works he thought were most generally read today:

Wells's "Outline of History," Longfellow's Poems, Dickens, as a whole, "Robinson Crusoe," "The Three Musketeers," "Treasure Island," Sherlock Holmes's books, Thackeray, as a whole, Shakespeare, Mark Twain.

Mr. Stockbridge also stressed the constantly changing point of view of the reading public toward what constitutes a classic.

"I suppose that 100 years ago if any one had predicted that Baxter's "Saint's Rest" was not a permanent book he would have been ridiculed," he said. "But it is now safe to say that 'Saint's Rest' has really passed from popularity. One hundred years ago today the best seller was a life of Washington by Mason L. Weems, Parson Weems, the famous rector of Mount Vernon. Now the life of Washington is still tremendously popular—but not the one written by Weems."

GREAT EXHIBITION OF VARIED BIBLES IS TO BE HELD SOON AT AUGSBURG

AN exhibition of Bibles in all languages and dialects, of all ages and prices and sizes, said to be the most complete ever held, will be one of the chief features of the 400th anniversary celebration of the "Confessio Augustana," which will begin at Augsburg, Germany, on June 15 and run until the end of September.

The confession of Augsburg, the work of the famous Reformation scholar Melancthon, was adopted by the Diet which met in Augsburg in the Summer of 1530. It set forth the tenets of the Lutheran faith in an official form and marked the Emperor's official recognition of Protestantism within its domains.

This Summer the city will commemorate this momentous date in modern European history by a series of festivals, exhibitions and special services. Besides the Bible exhibit, which will be under the auspices of the Prussian Bible Society and the Wurttemburgian Bible Press of Stuttgart, there will be the Reformation exhibition and a number of special days on which lectures, concerts and popular festivals will be held.

The Bible exhibit will be arranged in the Church of St. Anne, one of the most beautiful and famous churches of the cities and the one in which Luther dwelt during October, 1518, while answering for his faith to Cardinal Cajetan.

Besides a collection of Bibles in all living languages there will be copies of the Vulgate, the Bible in ancient Greek, in Hebrew, Yiddish, in Low German, in several variations of the Romany tongue and 125 different African dialects. In size the Bibles will range from tiny vest-pocket editions to the huge altar Bibles. There will be Bibles costing five cents a copy and luxurious ones bound in leather or Pergament with beaten gold corners which run to nearly $100 apiece.

An interesting comparison is planned between the September Bible (New Testament) which Luther caused to be printed in 1522 and the cheap editions of the New Testament used for missionary work today. The latter can be had for a nickel; the former was originally for sale at the current price of a cow.

There will also be illustrated Bibles, Bibles with maps, with glossaries, with commentaries and with cross-references.

A new Bible brought out by the Wurttemburg company containing 350 illustrations by Rudolf Schaefer, considered one of Germany's leading religious artists of today, is expected to attract particular attention.

BOY SCOUTS ARE EMBARKED ON TREE-PLANTING CAMPAIGN

MORE than 200,000 seedling trees have been set out this Spring by members of the Boy Scouts of America, according to reports received at the national offices in New York.

The largest single tree-planting project is being carried on in Emmet County, Iowa, where Scouts, with the help of other school children, are reforesting the entire county, but this project will take several years to be completed. At Oshkosh, Wis., Scouts are planting nearly 50,000 trees on the Twin Lakes reservation, the Oshkosh Council camp-site. The work is to be done under the direction of the Conservation Commission of Wisconsin and each Scout troop in the city is to plant 1,000 trees, which vary in height from three to eight inches. The Twin Lakes reservation contains 384 acres and there are large areas to be reforested, as much of the land is cleared and has been farmed.

A record of other similar projects includes 10,000 pine trees planted at Paxton, Mass., by the Scouts of Worcester and vicinity, under the direction of their executive, Gordon A. Blair; 1,000 pine trees set out on the borders of Spruce Pond, the Harriman State Park of New York, by Scouts of Brooklyn, under direction of Chief Forester Adolph of the Park Board, and 2,000 pine trees planted in Myrick Park, Spencer, Mass., by the Scouts of that locality, under the direction of Howard E. Hurley and Alfred E. Studley of the town forestry committee.

Fifty Scouts of Oneonta, N. Y., aided in the work of planting 100,000 seedling trees on land surrounding the reservoir near there recently. The trees were two and three year old transplants from the State Conservation Commission of Saratoga Springs, and were planted under the direction of State conservation officials. Milwaukee (Wis.) Boy Scouts planted 10,000 pine trees at the Moon Lake wild game refuge on May 17, and 20,000 pine trees were set out in the town forest of Leominster, Mass., by fifty Scouts, under the direction of City Forester David E. Bassett. Also, 2,000 seedlings were planted at Soldiers' Memorial Park at La Porte, Ind., by Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts under the direction of members of the Hammet-Gray Post of the American Legion. The trees were firs and spruces, two and three years old.

More than 4,700 seedlings were planted at the reservation at Camp Russell of the Massillon, Ohio, Scouts, and under the direction of Professor A. J. Cope of Cornell University a party of Canandaigua, N. Y., Scouts and Scoutmasters set out 3,000 red pine saplings on the reservation at Bristol Hills, N. Y.

MONTREAL-QUEBEC TOUR

SPEND your vacation in the magnificent Adirondacks—the Cradle of American Liberty! ¶ Along the shores of Adirondack lakes, on Adirondack mountain tops and in Adirondack valleys were waged the bloody battles that gave birth to our glorious Nation.

Champlain, Joques, Montcalm, Johnson, Allen, Burgoyne, Burr, Arnold, Washington, "King" Hendrick, Brant, Abercrombie and innumerable unnamed heroes bequeathed historic value upon the wilderness of the Red Men where Hiawatha ruled and Uncas and Leatherstocking roamed.

Today armies of pleasure seekers are invading these historic mountains—through portals revealed by Champlain and Hudson they pass into a veritable Summer Paradise.

Pluck two or more fully ripe midsummer weeks . . . Slice into fourteen equal parts and set aside to cool in a mountain breeze . . . Pour in the juice of a dozen rounds of golf . . . Of the following add according to taste: Tennis, Fishing, Hiking, Horseback Riding, Drowsing on some windswept veranda, Moonlight romancing in a canoe for two . . . Serve with full measure of complete confidence.

This health-giving Pennsylvania delicacy never fails to banish all memories even of city dust and din and dog-days, and makes the delighted vacation gourmet wonder how such delectable things may be had only a few hours' comfortable train ride from Times Square.

AT BANFF

a golf course that's a mile high!

Keep your eye on the ball. There you go . . . right over a rollicking river. Enough hazards to test your skill . . . and to give you a thrill! What exciting tournaments are held on this unique course. But three sets of tees give everyone a sporting chance . . . beginner, average player or expert. If you like tennis . . . don't miss the en-tout-cas courts. Take your choice of three swimming pools . . . hot sulphur, warm sulphur and glacial waters. Sure-footed ponies carry you up to just this side of Paradise. In the evening, the ballroom is irresistible. A light opera company also . . . in July and August . . . with delightful concert talent. So, plan for at least a month at Banff Springs Hotel . . . smartest resort in the Canadian Rockies. A season would be perfect! Attractive rates . . . for a month or the season. And you go there on a fast Canadian Pacific train.

Reservations from F. R. Perry, Gen. Agent, Madison Ave. at 44th St., New York. Ask for Tour B—119

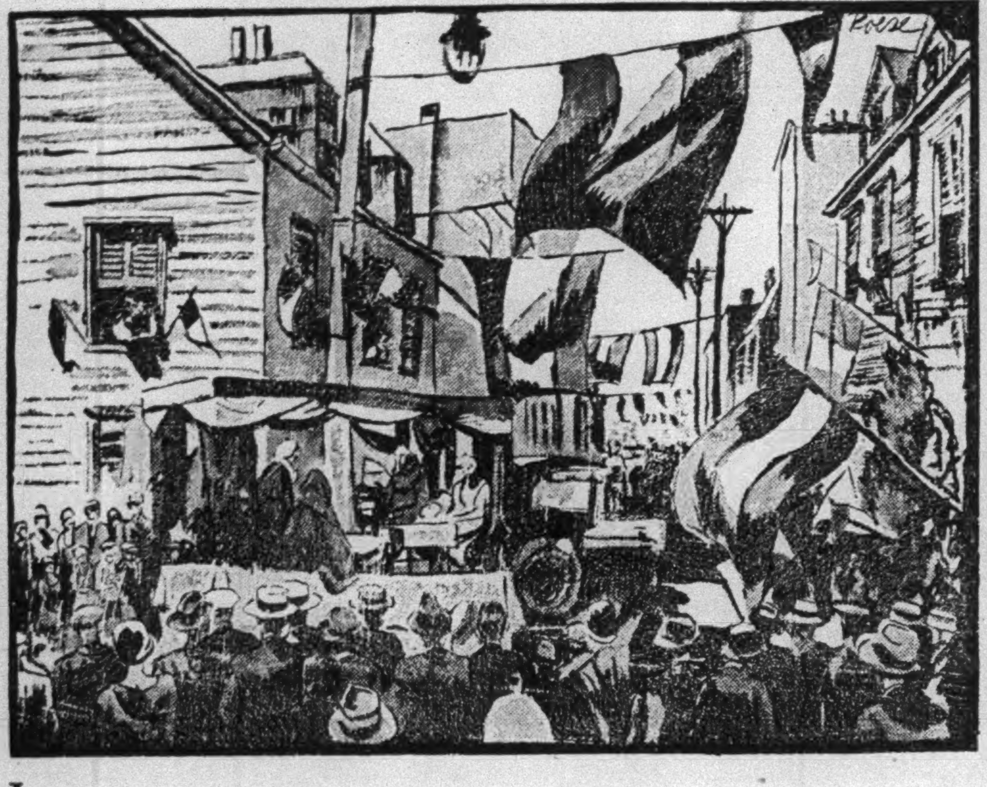
See the... ST. JEAN FESTIVAL in Historic Québec

Peasants harvest their crops within sight of the Chateau's tall towers.



JUNE-TIME in Québec is a pageant of the past... culminating in the historic Fête de St. Jean Baptiste staged by the Chevaliers de St. Jean, on June 24th.

Come to Québec the Friday before. Spend Saturday getting historic background. Take a horse-drawn calèche with a Québeçois driver who has the royal history of his city by heart. On Sunday, go to high mass at the great Basilica ... or to the Church of England service where you can see the plate given to the altar by George the Third. On Monday, motor along the Route de Roi to Ste. Anne de Beaupré of the miracles, stopping at historic Kent House by the way. On Tuesday, the St. Jean Festival will occupy your entire day. For its parade, historic manoir houses yield up their treasures ... you will see periwigs, silk breeches, cunningly-wrought swords and shoe-buckles worn again by great-great-great grandsons of houses which take their title deeds from the Kings of France, and demoiselles in court costumes of long-ago. Wednesday, rest, or play a little golf at Montmorency. Thursday, if you're a valiant sightseer, drive out to Indian Lorette, where the ancient church's archives date back to the Jesuit martyrs. Friday, shop for antiques and homespuns and furs and moccasins ... and after another delicious Chateau meal, another wonderful sleep, decide to stay all summer!

Through Pullman overnight from Grand Central Terminal ... 9:45 p. m. Reservations from Chateau Frontenac, Québec, Canada; or F. R. Perry, General Agent, 344 Madison Avenue, New York.

Now...cruise the PACIFIC!

The MALOLO takes you to 19 ports in 12 countries

Shanghai, China

YOUR great travel adventure is ready—a luxurious cruise on one of the world's fine liners to all the lovely, "wicked" cities of the Pacific!

Have you ever shopped in Singapore, the "Paris of the East," or picked up amazing bargains in the quaint bazaars of Batavia? Have you seen Siam's Temple of the Emerald Buddha or watched the mystic marriage rites of child brides of Celebes?

All these wonderful experiences will be yours on the Malolo's Around Pacific Cruise! You'll visit 19 strange ports in 12 countries of the Orient, Philippines, Malaya, East Indies, Australia and South Seas. Many shore excursions will be made with expert guides.

You'll be in Japan at chrysanthemum time and in the orchid lands below the "line" just when their spring is at its full. Sailing day is September 20 from San Francisco and you return December 19, home for Christmas.

2nd and 3rd Days—At sea—dancing, deck sports, concerts, bridge parties, and luxurious loafing.

4th Day—Arrive at Miami, 7 A. M. Room and private bath in a beautiful new hotel at Miami or Miami Beach as you prefer. Sightseeing trip in the afternoon through Greater Miami, Coral Gables, Tropical Gardens, Indian Village, Alligator Farm, Aquarium and Museum.

5th Day—The morning to yourself and in the afternoon a trip in Glass Bottom Boat to the Marine Gardens.

6th Day—The morning is free. In the afternoon another sightseeing trip of Miami Beach, plus a dip in the ocean, if you wish. You'll see the millionaire-made islands, the palatial Spanish type homes, etc.

7th Day—Another morning free. Sailing in the afternoon along the Florida East Coast to Jacksonville.

8th Day—Arrive Jacksonville 9 A. M. Sightseeing trip to the Ostrich and Alligator Farms and other sights of the city. Sail for New York and home at 3 P. M.

9th Day—At sea again—docking in New York early on the 10th day.

Send for descriptive booklet, also information about a dozen other All-Expense Tours to Florida including Jacksonville, St. Augustine, Daytona Beach, Silver Springs, the Palm Beaches, Miami Beach, etc.

HERE'S ocean travel on big new ships. Here's the most magnificent seaside resort in the East. Here's extravagant beauty that only millionaires could build.

Miami is just as alluring during summer as in the winter. Only a very few degrees difference in temperature. The same cooling trade winds gently tempered by the Gulf Stream. Here you can bathe where rotogravure celebrities bathe, play golf and tennis on internationally famous courses and courts. Attractions galore to suit every mood and taste.

Interesting sightseeing trips in Miami and Miami Beach are provided so that you won't miss a thing—and a day of sightseeing in Jacksonville, besides! In addition to all that, five whole days of seagoing carnival aboard a jolly famous ship. Skip gaily from concerts to dances, from bridge to shuffleboard, from quoits to moonlight promenades—something doing every minute aboard ship. And not an expense to worry about. Every cost is included in one low, all-expense rate.

FURNESS
Bermuda Line

The "VEENDAM" Dutch Crew and All—Joins the "Bermuda" for Transatlantic Vacations to BERMUDA

8 DAY VACATION TRIPS INCLUDING SHIPBOARD, HOTEL and SIGHTSEEING EXPENSES $105 up

NEW "Transatlantic" luxury for your Bermuda vacation! Take off on the "Veendam" and thrill to the experience of sailing on a liner famous in oceanic and cruising service. Chartered from the Holland-America Line, the "Veendam" retains its entire crew—even to the Dutch chef. Many a European voyager knows what that means! Whether you sail on the "Veendam" or the motorship "Bermuda," Furness service insures a glorious time on shipboard. Deck games, concerts, dancing, afternoon teas, bridge parties, swimming, gym sports, entertainments — everything is geared to the vacation tempo in Transatlantic style.

Real Vacation Value

Day for day, a Bermuda vacation is the biggest vacation value today. In addition to first class accommodations and meals aboard ship, the All-Expense rate includes room and meals at one of Bermuda's fine hotels. It also covers a series of independent carriage drives admission to the Crystal Caves, steamboat excursion to the Coral Reefs, view of strange fish and coral formations at Marine Gardens through a glass-bottomed boat, drives to the bathing beaches, etc.

OTHER ALL-EXPENSE TRIPS
9 Days . $111 and up
12 Days . $129 and up 15 Days . $147 and up
16 Days . 153 and up 18 Days . 165 and up

Lots of time besides for cycling over auto-less roads, for horseback or sailing, for speed boating or fishing. You'll find it hard to tear away from those "talcum-powder" beaches and your golf clubs and tennis racket will get the workout of a lifetime on world-famous tournament courses and courts. In the evenings, Bermuda will work its greatest magic as you are welcomed with typically British charm to its gay social whirl.

Mid-Ocean Temperature

Bermuda is NOT in the tropics. Far out at sea, these isles are surrounded by ocean breezes on all sides. The average summer temperature is 77° and, being without humidity, is more comfortable than in many northern resorts. Better bring wraps along for the cool evening.

Sailings every Wednesday on S. S. "Veendam" and every Saturday on M. S. "Bermuda," Commencing June 28.

IMPORTANT TO NOTE: "Veendam" and "Bermuda" sail from Manhattan Pier 95 (West 55th St.) and go direct to dock at Hamilton (Bermuda) thus avoiding inconvenience of five mile transfer from anchorage.

Make early reservations. For further information and literature, apply to Furness Bermuda Line, 34 Whitehall St. (where Broadway begins) or 565 Fifth Ave., New York or any Authorized agent.

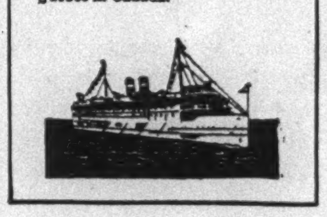
VERY IMPORTANT

CANADA STEAMSHIP LINES operate from the head of Lake Superior, via the St. Lawrence River, to the Saguenay. Their cruises include the seven day trip from Detroit to Duluth and return; Niagara to the Saguenay, including the Thousand Islands, and shooting the rapids; excursions from Toronto, the Queen City, to Niagara, the Thousand Islands and Rochester. They operate a fleet of 106 steamers, freight and passenger, and are the largest fresh water transportation company in the world. The famous Saguenay trip includes visits to Montreal, metropolis of Canada; Quebec, the historic walled city; Murray Bay, "Newport of the North" and Tadoussac, Canada's oldest settlement. The Saguenay Canyon is one of nature's masterpieces.

Our steamers may be boarded at Lewiston, Rochester, Duluth or Detroit in the U.S.A., or Sarnia, Queenston, Toronto, Montreal or Quebec in Canada.



THE old fashioned calèche, from the high seat of which you may overlook anything on four wheels, is but one of the up-to-date relics of bygone times which will delight you in French Canada.

This is a country of sunshine and pines, with air that sends your spirits soaring. You will travel in a foreign land at very moderate expense—and with no passport required.

Our modern roomy passenger steamers take in all the worth while sights and scenes between Niagara and the Saguenay River. Here is hotel comfort aboard ship, a very excellent cuisine, and most reasonable rates for travel and luxurious living combined.

Please write at once for illustrated folder, map and guide, which describes in detail the pleasures of this wonderful vacation cruise.

Empress of Japan

ORIENT

● On Sept. 4, there embarks from Vancouver the largest and fastest liner ever to ply between America, Hawaii and the Far East. She is Canadian Pacific's mammoth new white giantess . . . S. S. Empress of Japan, 39,000 tons displacement, 21 knots speed.

She fulfills the Pacific "miracle". . . the "miracle" which has been turning Far East into Near West . . . the "narrowing" of the Pacific already started by her queenly white sisters, Empresses of Canada, Asia, and Russia.

Her palatial appointments, her new advances in equipment, present hitherto unheard-of luxuries in ocean travel. She includes de luxe suites-with-bath opening onto private verandahs. Her great swimming pool is tiled in black-and-green marble. Her vast sports deck has its adjacent cafe for refreshing interludes. Telephones, lifts, pier-glass, teakwood floors, imperial lounges, children's play cottage, and period ballroom . . . these all combine to make the Empress of Japan the chosen liner for Orient commuters . . . that smart international group who prefer their congenial, do-as-you-please shipboard life. Moreover, her second cabin is proportionally delightful.

A great white Empress sails frequently from Vancouver and Victoria. Ask about reduced first class round-trip summer fares to the Orient. Also about All-Expense Escorted House Party Tours to the Orient, $715 up.

CRUISES

with* WORLD-WIDE "KNOW-HOW"

Round the World . . . ● The veteran travel "know-how" of the world's greatest travel system takes the distinguished white Empress of Australia, 21,850 gross-ton liner, from New York, next Dec. 2. Canadian Pacific's veteran experience in 7 previous world cruises insures preferred entrée in every port . . . plans the 137-day itinerary so that it follows spring around the world . . . maintains service and cuisine in the smart New York-Paris note. Book now for accommodations at your price, from $2000. Ask for booklets, ship plans.

Mediterranean . . . ● The same "know-how". . . the same perfect one management, ship and shore, which leaves you nothing to do but enjoy 73 glorious days . . . sail with the Empress of France, from New York, Feb. 3. She takes you through the complete Mediterranean adventure . . . the usual ports and those off the beaten path. In appointments, service and cuisine, she rivals famous private yachts. Best accommodations, from $900, booking fast. Ask for booklets, ship plans, from your own agent, or

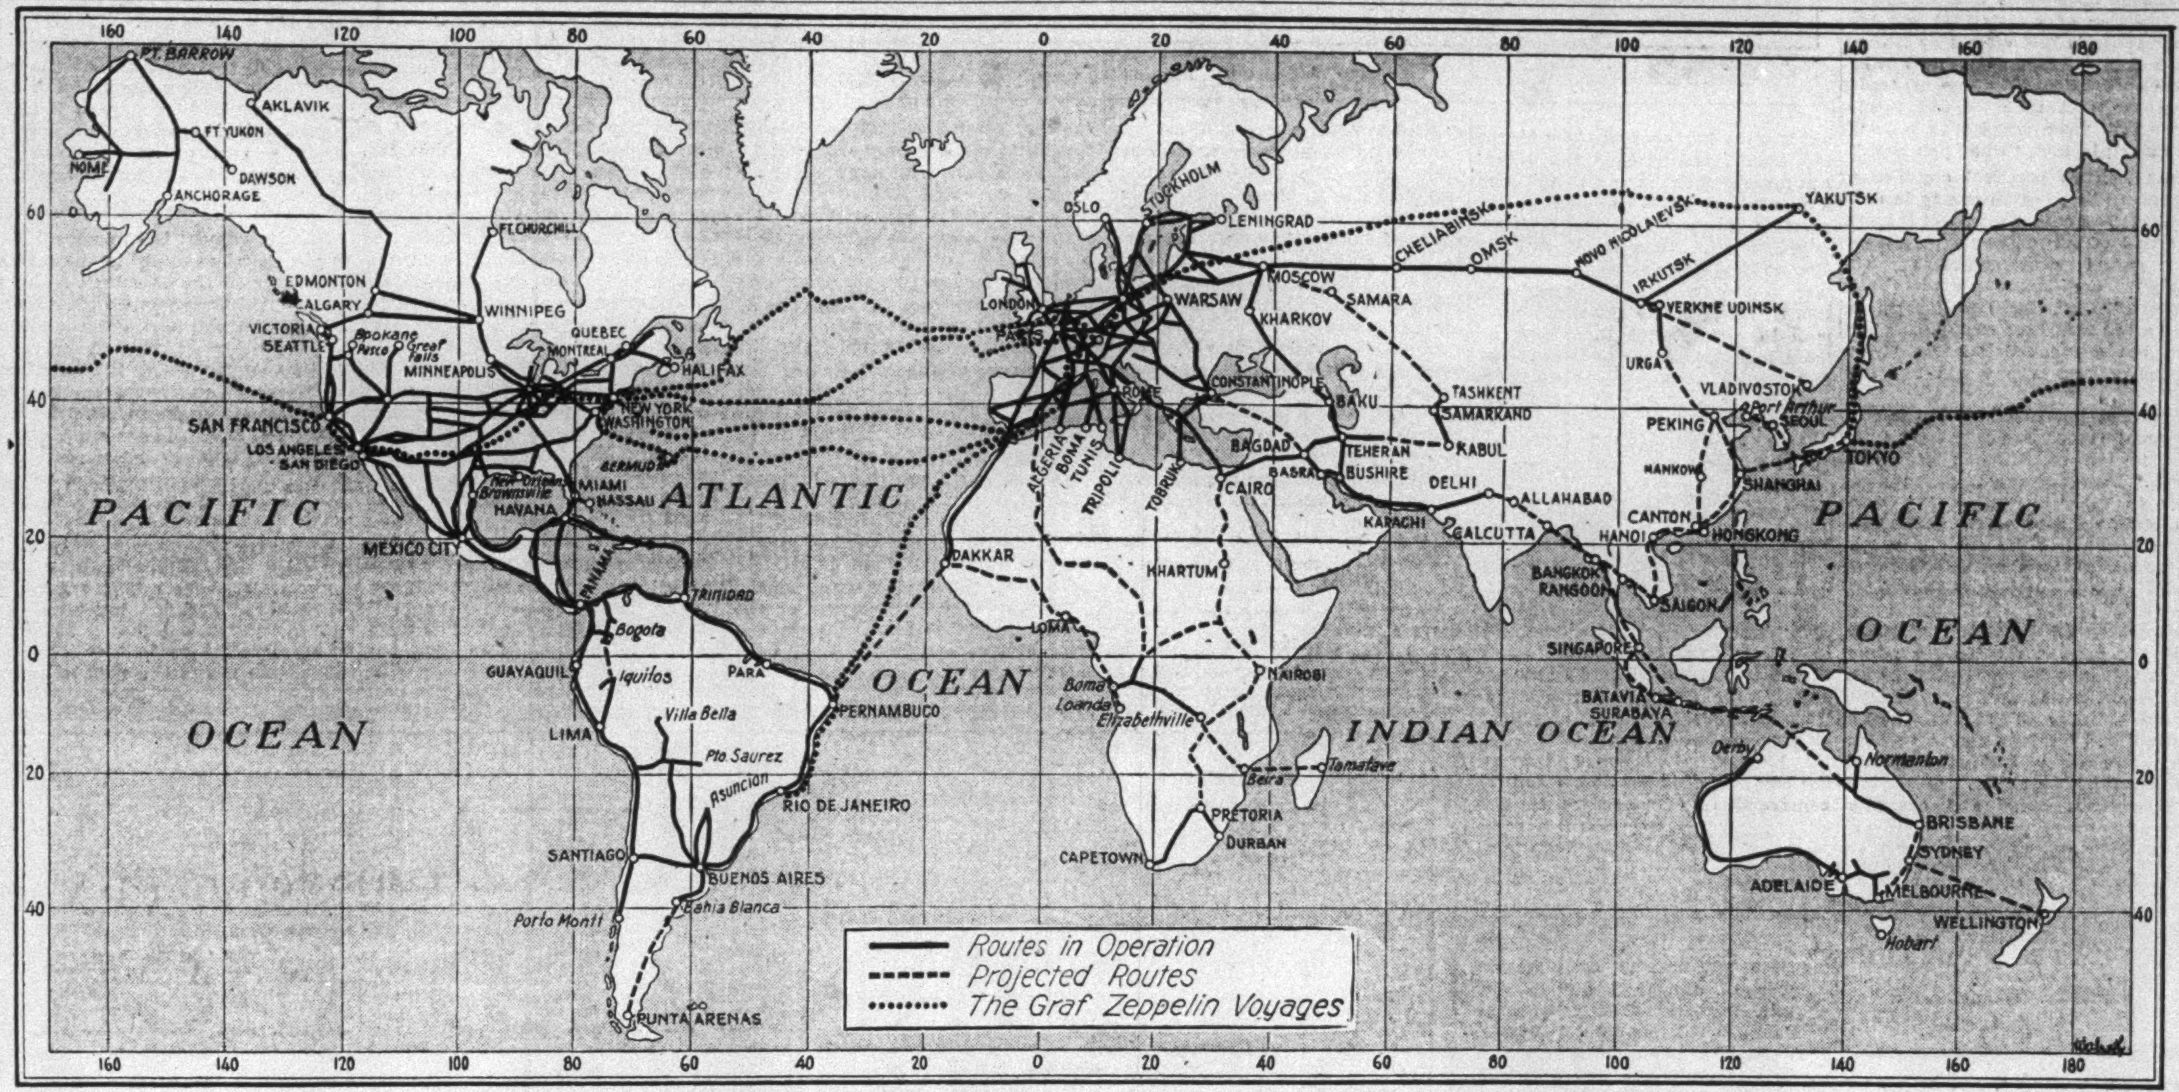
A NEW AIRWAY BLAZED BETWEEN CONTINENTS

In the Flight From Europe to South America the Graf Zeppelin Directs Attention to a Growing System of Intercontinental Routes That, Ignoring Old Paths of Communication, Cut the Distances Between Far Cities and Point the Way to a Closer Linking of the World



THE NETWORK OF AIRWAYS THAT LINKS THE CONTINENTS OF THE WORLD IN A GROWING SYSTEM.

The Dotted Lines on the Map Show Where the Graf Zeppelin Girdled the Globe and Crossed and Recrossed the Atlantic. The New Airway Blazed by the Airship Is Shown as Far as Rio de Janeiro. From There Her Course Follows Routes Already Traveled. The Full Lines Show Where the Airplane Has Spun Its Spider's Web of Airways Throughout the World. The Broken Lines Show the Major Projected Airlines.

By T. J. C. MARTYN.

A NEW airway has been blazed between two continents. By her flight from Friedrichshafen to Seville, thence across the ocean to Pernambuco and Rio de Janeiro, the Graf Zeppelin once again has conquered time and space in a magnificent aerial voyage which stands second only to her circumnavigation of the globe last year. Yet this last flight, projected from Brazil to New York and thence back to Europe, stands for something more significant than the spectacular. Admittedly obsolete, and therefore of relatively poor performance, the Graf Zeppelin points to the great things the future may hold.

What has been done by the airplane over non-stop, long-distance courses has been dwarfed. The Graf Zeppelin, with economic argument set hard against her, has nevertheless established her superiority in the ease and safety with which she has crossed wide-flung oceans. In crossing the seas, heavier-than-air planes have not yet conquered; the spectacular flights which have been made have not yet proved them to be reliable and therefore practical.

Beyond this immediate and abortive rivalry, a larger picture presents itself. And in it airship, airplane and flying boat have spun a spider's web around the world. Pioneers, all three, they yet have given to us the system of air routes over which an increasing number of people, an increasing amount of mail and a steadily rising amount of light express are flown. The Graf Zeppelin fixes our attention on the world's aerial highways of today and conjures up the airways of the future.

A New Relativity in Distance.

Twenty years ago there were no airways here or anywhere else. Ten years ago they were negligible, totally without equipment and existing only as the name of the shortest distance between a few centres of population separated by short distances. Today they stretch over every continent in the world until San Francisco and Los Angeles are no further away from New York by air than is Chicago by rail. In Europe the Far East has become closer to Berlin by air than New York is by boat, though the distance is far greater. And the British Empire manifests a spirited interest in its destiny by bringing India within a week's flight from London.

And yet this is but a beginning. While the airplane has made giant strides in intra-continental aerial communications over land, it has been left to the airship to establish inter-continental air routes over sea. True, airplanes have spanned the North and the South Atlantic Oceans, have fringed the wide Pacific to the Far East, have girdled half the globe to far-flung Australasia, crossing either the Timor Sea or, once, the forbidding Pacific by the most direct westerly route. And recently they have even swept over the icy remoteness of the sleeping continent of Antarctica. Where the airplane has sown its seeds of pioneering over the land or over short water courses it is gathering a rich commercial harvest. Over the oceans it has brought into full flower some of the finest qualities of mankind, but has accomplished little commercially useful.

The airship has proved itself in inverse directions. Slower, more vulnerable to the vicissitudes of the fickle god Aeolus, but with vast manoeuvring ability while in the air, yet difficult to handle while on the ground, it has been at a decided disadvantage compared to the airplane over short land distances. Over long distances over land it has needed less ground organization than the airplane. But it is over the oceans that it has shown its superiority and has, so far, made the only flights that seem to hold promise of commercial practicability.

The Mobile Mooring Mast.

The airship is at last beginning to realize its fabled future. The other day the Los Angeles took off with the aid of a new mobile mooring mast. It took 60 men in the place of 200 to handle her on the ground. If this device is proved to be successful after further tests it will cut down the number of men the Graf Zeppelin needs from 400 to 120 or perhaps even less. This is an enormous potential saving in the cost of airship operations and it is indicative of even greater economies.

If we were to look into the future we might see airways everywhere, with airplanes flying in 500-mile jumps from one centre of civilization to another, perhaps even over the oceans. In this way they would be able to carry less fuel and more passengers and light freight. Compared to the airship they would go much faster and be far more mobile. Whether they would be more or less navigable in inclement weather is a question upon which science will ultimately deliver its decision.

The airship will fly over great circle tracks, and to a great extent will be independent of airways. Great circle routes are the names given to the shortest path between any two points over long distances, especially in the northern part of the Northern Hemisphere and the southern part of the Southern Hemisphere. This is so because the earth is spherical. The shortest distance from New York to Peking, for example, is over the polar regions and not around by way of San Francisco, which would be a small circle route. The air course for London from New York is not east but northeast across Newfoundland.

Since the airship will always be able to carry far more than the airplane and will be able to stay in the air longer and yet derive all the benefits from good ground organization in the way of beacons, weather reporting, directional navigation aids by radio, gyroscopic steering, &c., we may find enormous liners of the air taking off from Chicago and flying across the north polar regions for Moscow. By land and water Moscow lies from Chicago about 5,500 miles distant; by a great circle the air route is about 4,100 miles. If heavy commercial airplanes reach a cruising speed of 250 miles an hour, which is at present a remote contingency, such a route would be also commercially possible for them. But for the airship a great circle route is already such a possibility. And it will not greatly stretch credulity to imagine them going at a cruising speed of 100 miles an hour and covering, in the greatest comfort, an aerial voyage from Chicago to Moscow in two days.

Cutting Time and Distance.

The fact that a great circle route would not ordinarily touch at the centres of population is an argument in favor of the airship, with its capabilities for long sustained flight and its ability to dodge storms. If a Westerner should wish to go from Los Angeles to Paris, he might at some time in the future conceivably take an airship and fly across Northern Canada and Greenland, whose huge ice deserts readily lend themselves to the installation of beacons and radio direction aids. Nowadays he would have to travel by land and water something near 6,500 miles for ten days before he reached his destination. In ten years' time, say, the trip by airship would take him perhaps no longer than two and one-half days and the distance covered would be no longer than 5,000 miles.

Even from New York to northern parts of Northern Europe the route across Greenland's icy hinterland is the shortest. To many points below the Equator on the other side of the world the northern route is a time saver. For instance, the shortest route from Chicago to Calcutta by land and water is 10,700 miles; by the direct air route it is but 8,000 miles. Any number of instances might be given, but it avails only to take into consideration the giant strides that are being made to speed the human race in transit—strides which are surely bringing the Russian peasant as close to the mid-Western farmer as a century ago Bostonians were distant from Washington.

When one looks at the progress that has been made so far with the airplane, the airways picture becomes more understandable and not so far-fetched. In the last ten years the airways of the United States have been born and have grown up to be not the longest but the best equipped of any in the world. Though America lags far behind Europe in the number of passengers carried, an air mail system has been created and developed here that easily surpasses anything else any other combination of countries has to offer. You can today fly from New York to San Francisco by day or by night (not yet on a regular all-air transcontinental passenger route) and everywhere you will find the evidences of a budding airmindedness. If you fly with the air mail at night to the West Coast, you can be guided by a chain of lights 3,000 miles long flashing their helpful messages from coast to coast.

The official figures on the mileage flown last year, the number of passenger and the vast quantity of mail carried are instructive: In round figures the major air transport companies operating on regular schedules flew more than 20,000,000 miles, carried more than 7,000,000 pounds of mail and transported more than 165,000 passengers.

If you look at the map you will see many countries each delimited as to some natural or artifical frontier. If you cross on foot, by automobile or in a train, or by boat into another country, in all probability you will not see the actual frontier, but you will sense it because there will immediately be a number of formalities to be complied with. In flying there are no frontiers, although international law is beginning to create them. But inevitably, because it is the nature of air travel, there will come into existence great international airways that will make light of frontiers.

The seeds have been sown. You may fly in the United States not merely from one coast to another but also into the North beyond Minneapolis to Winnipeg and on either to Fort Churchill or Aklavik in northernmost Canada; from Salt Lake City to Great Falls and Pasco; from San Francisco to Seattle. You may go south from New York to Miami and New Orleans or north to Montreal and Quebec. From Wichita you may go down to Fort Worth and Brownsville, or westward to San Diego.

You may go even further south and fly down to Mexico City, or cross over from Miami either to Nassau, Cuba or San Domingo and not stop until you reach Trinidad. Or you may choose to go by a circuitous route via Havana to the Panama Canal zone. Once in South America you may fly as far south along the west coast as Santiago de Chile, hop over the Andes to Buenos Aires, or down the east coast from Trinidad and, eventually, not stop until you reach Punta Arenas at the southernmost tip of the Argentine. These are great beginnings.

On the other side of the Atlantic another story is being told, outmatching legend in the miracles it is performing of shrinking whole continents. In Europe you may take a plane and fly to any capital and often at prices that compare favorably to those charged by the railroads. Frontiers are already beginning to lose their significance as whole peoples are thus brought closer to each other's front doors.

Great Britain has perhaps the longest airway in regular operation, that from London across France, Italy, Greece, Egypt, Syria, Iraq, Persia, to Karachi, India. Even this is not enough. From Karachi a line goes to Delhi and eventually one will be able to fly to Allahabad in the centre of India to Calcutta on the east coast, thence to Rangoon and on to the tip of the Malay States, and finally on to Australia and New Zealand. This is more than half way around the world, and the chances are that eventually the flight will be concluded comfortably within a week after leaving London. Thus are aeronautics becoming a veritable Aladdin's lamp of human transportation.

Several times have airmen and airwomen traversed the skies which separate the heart of the British Empire from one of its furthest flung outposts—Cape Town in South Africa. Now there is soon to come into being a regular airway between London and the town at the tip of the African continent. It will branch off the India airway at Cairo, run due south through the Sudan to Khartum, thence to Nairobi on the Kenya Colony and Tanganyika borderline, and on through Rhodesia to Pretoria, capital of the Dominion, where it will branch, one route going to Durban on the east coast and the other going to Cape Town.

Rivaling these magic carpet dreams is the airway from Berlin (which really means from any other point in Europe) to Moscow, far across the wide expanse of Siberia to Urga and Yatusk. A projected line is to run from Urga to Peking, thence either via Hankow or Shanghai to Hongkong. From there an airway will run to Hanoi in French Indo-China and on to Saigon and thence northwest to Bangkok, capital of Siam, to connect with the British system at Rangoon.

Development in Russia.

Russia, with vast distances to conquer and few railroads to conquer them with, is developing airways at a great rate, chiefly with the aid of the Germans. One of her principal routes goes south from Moscow to Kharkov, thence to Baku on the Caspian Sea, jumping on to Teheran, capital of Persia, and joining up with the British system at Bushire at the head of the Persian Gulf. Another route will run strategically to Kabul, capital of Afghanistan.

Many other instances of long airways could be given, such as the great Dutch undertaking from the Netherlands to Java, the French route to Dakar on the west coast of Africa, from which points mails are now shipped by fast boats to South America. There are, too, the projected French lines across the Sahara Desert, planned in conjunction with Belgium and designed to open up the Sahara and the Belgian Congo. These there are and still others.

Although all this has been accomplished, there are, properly speaking, extremely few fully organized airways in existence. To clarify this statement an airway must be defined. It is not a nebulous line running between cities and towns, but an actual line demanding an intricate ground organization and infinite care. Along first-class airways there should be good landing facilities at various intervals, where fuel can be had and repairs made. Cities, towns and villages along the way should be marked so that their names can be read from the air. In other places large, white direction markers should be plainly visible. On either side of the airway, which may be figuratively several miles wide, weather reporting stations should be located, which send out reports hourly for a particular zone so that these reports may be correlated and transmitted to planes in flight along the airway. Radio direction beacons should function along them, enabling the pilot by an instrument in his cockpit to keep on the course of the airway. At night all airports along the route must be equipped for night landings, while at short intervals emergency landing grounds should be marked in lights. Between these, every ten or fifteen miles, or even over shorter distances, depending on the nature of the country, beacons should flash out their friendly guiding light.

United States Ahead in Airways.

Such is an airway. But so young is the science of aeronautics, so fast are the changes rung, so much has been discovered in the last few years, that not one single airway comes quite up to the standard described. In the length of its lighted airways and the wonderful organization that goes with them, the United States is far ahead of any other country. In weather reporting, daylight marking and many passenger facilities Germany is probably in the lead. But distinctions are invidious. Airways all over the world are having their growing pains—some more acutely than others—but all are growing into a highly organized system that will almost surely be as different ten years hence from what it is today as the first railroad is from the present steel highways.

The oceans meanwhile remain a barrier. But something is being done about them, and it is not possible to say today whether ultimate victory is to rest with the airship or is to be wrested from it by the airplane. The oceans, too, are to have their airways if the will of man conquers.

It may sound a far-fetched thing to attempt, but an attempt is seriously being made, at present in an experimental way, to establish a chain of seadrome ocean airways. In other words it is proposed to anchor in the middle of the ocean an enormous floating island on which large airplanes can land and take off, on which there will be large and luxurious hotels, machine shops, hangars, beacons, floodlights, radio direction apparatus and all the other modern paraphernalia that goes to make a first-class airway station.

A Bermuda Line.

At first, probably next year, a seadrome will be towed out to midway between New York and Bermuda, a distance of about 350 miles from either end. Thus an airplane flying at 100 miles an hour would never be more than one and three-quarter hours away from a landing place, or more than 175 miles away. Perhaps next year people in Bermuda will be able to read a New York newspaper on the morning of its date of publication. If the experiment proves successful, eight of these seadromes will eventually be towed to stations about 350 miles apart in the Atlantic between the United States and Europe. It would take six seadromes to go from the West Coast to the Philippines. Thus may the oceans be lit.

The principle upon which the seadrome rests has been pronounced sound by competent engineers. In reality it is simple, although a great many intricate problems are involved. The seadrome deck, made of steel, is 70 feet above sea level, thus allowing the mightiest of storms to pass under it. The deck is 1,100 feet long and 340 feet wide in its centre part.

This enormous area is supported by thirty-one buoyancy tanks differing in diameter, but all 38 feet deep. These tanks are sunk 20 feet below mean water level. Ninety-seven feet below them lower columns extend to the ballast tanks, which are 22 feet deep and are filled with enough iron ore ballast to bring the centre of gravity 10 feet below the centre of buoyancy. In all, from the top of the deck to the bottom of the ballast tanks, the structure is 177 feet high. The seadrome will be anchored by a long cable similar to the cables used in the construction of the Hudson River bridge.

And, if we are to have seadromes linked 350 miles apart in ocean airways, it may not be very far-fetched to look forward to a chain of beacons between them, each supported by a buoy, so that a pilot would always have guiding lights in view at night and, perhaps, distinctive objects with fixed locations to guide him in daytime. The technical problems involved are much less than in the case of the seadrome.

CRUDE OIL REFINED IN A NEW WAY

Hydrogenation Solves Some Problems And Raises Others for the Producer

FOR ten years, more or less, the oil refiner has had three perplexing problems with which to grapple—bugbears which have thwarted his best efforts to effect a balance in his operations:

1. A rapidly swelling call from the motoring public for more gas—a demand that has multiplied nearly four times in the past decade.

2. Inability, with existing processes, to draw more than approximately 42 per cent of gasoline from the average barrel of crude oil.

3. Consequent overproduction of heavy fuel oil and other residues far and above the market demand for such products.

For these problems hydrogenation is providing a ready and satisfactory solution. The idea received its first impetus in Germany—in the laboratories of the I. G. Farbenindustrie Aktiengesellschaft. Germany has ample beds of cheap brown coal close to the surface and easily mined with mechanical equipment. So the "I. G." concentrated at first on the conversion of coal into oil. In 1928 its experiments resulted in the erection and operation of a coal hydrogenation plant near Merseburg. More than 300,000 barrels of gasoline, similar in every way to petroleum gasoline as we know it here, were produced from coal and coal tar that year, and this figure has since been increased.

American Experiments.

In the meantime the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, having entered into an agreement with the "I. G.," took the process into its development laboratories and for three years tested its application to petroleum. A small commercial plant was built at Baton Rouge. In the Fall of 1929, at Bayway, N. J., work was begun on the first large-scale commercial plant designed solely for the hydrogenation of petroleum. That plant is now nearing completion and will be ready this Summer.

Two similar plants are under construction at Baton Rouge and at Baytown, Texas. The Merseburg plant of the I. G. Farbenindustrie has extended its operations now to cover both coal and oil.

The theory of the process, which is one of the outstanding triumphs of synthetic chemistry, is simple enough. Petroleum, like coal, is a hydrocarbon—or rather, a mixture of many hydrocarbons, compounds composed of hydrogen and carbon. As oil is refined or "boiled down" the lighter products come off first, and the further down the scale the refiner gets the more carbon he has left in proportion to hydrogen.

It seemed perfectly simple, therefore, to add more hydrogen to the residue in order to build it up into lighter products, just as a housewife adds water to soup that has boiled down and become too thick.

Technical difficulties stood in the way. Hydrogen in the free state is just too lazy or too unsociable to hook up with other hydrocarbons. It takes high temperatures and pressures and the action of a catalyst, or assisting agent, to turn the trick. There are still many questions that can be answered only in the commercial operations soon to start.

Getting down to the application of the process, just what can it be expected to accomplish? And what will be its place in the oil refinery of the future? So far as it has been explored, the potential field of hydrogenation may be said definitely to cover these three operations:

1. Conversion of coal and other carbonaceous solids into oil.

2. Synthesis or "building up" of heavy oils, natural or synthetic, into lighter products, such as gasoline.

3. Conversion of crude oils and intermediate or finished products into similar ones of modified chemical characteristics.

Let us see how these fit into conditions in the industry today.

Men can only guess at how much oil there is in the vast underground pools awaiting the coming of the driller's bit. Some estimate the known reserves to be sufficient for another generation, or two, or three. But every time some one has ventured to mention a definite figure nature has made him out to be a hopeless pessimist. In 1915 a widely known geologist went on record to the effect that 5,750,000,000 barrels was about all the world could count on in the way of future oil supply. To date the industry has passed that mark by just 2,000,000,000 barrels. And, of course, the end is not in sight.

It can be seen, therefore, that, while the practically unlimited reserves of coal and shale which may be had almost for the asking now stand forever between the industry and a famine of petroleum products, the day when hydrogenation will be called upon generally to convert these hydrocarbons into oil is still in the indefinite future.

The second function of the process, namely, the conversion of heavy oils into light products is, of course, going to prove the biggest boon to the refiner right now. For, if needed, he can produce 100 per cent of gasoline from a barrel of crude—over double the present average yield.

The third use of hydrogenation is one the possibilities of which are almost unlimited.

In the testing laboratories of the Standard Oil Company at Bayway are barrels of sample products from thousands of oil fields all over the world. Each has different basic characteristics, different chemical make-up. Each represents a new and distinct problem to the refiner. For out of a thousand different varieties of crude he must produce a stream of finished products of uniform specifications.

A Uniform Product.

By means of hydrogenation the refiner will now be enabled to remove sulphur and various impurities and otherwise modify the chemical characteristics of the oil in his stills. In other words, the refinery of the future may be expected to turn out petroleum products of improved quality with a minimum of variation.

Viewed in its proper perspective, hydrogenation appears not as a "revolution in refining" to supplant the crude and cracking still, but rather to supplement them. Its future place in the machinery of the oil refinery is that of a balance wheel, a rectifier, preventing excess production of any one grade, removing impurities from crude stocks, filling the demand for lighter ends from heavy residues that otherwise would go to glut the fuel oil market.

Admittedly, hydrogenation is potentially the most far-reaching development in refining yet to appear on the horizon. But if it solves most of the oil man's refining troubles, it just about doubles his producing worries. Overproduction of crude oil has long been the industry's greatest problem. And hand in hand with it has gone a corresponding overproduction of gasoline and heavy fuel oils. With the technicalities of State and Federal anti-trust laws—statutes originally framed for quite a different purpose—standing in the way of any general agreement to curtail production to fit market requirements, the producers have had to worry along as best they could on such measures as could be effected in individual fields. And the results, naturally enough, have not been altogether satisfactory.

FORTUNES LAID OUT IN QUEST OF SPEED

Machines That Add Only a Little to Present Records Are Sought by the Adventurous

HAVING set a world's speed record for automobiles, Sir Henry Segrave now turns to motor boats. When he shot down Daytona Beach at the rate of 231.36 miles an hour in March, 1929, he was traveling faster than any one would care to drive an automobile as a regular thing. His backers spent a fortune in achieving this speed and the speed itself was the only apparent objective.

If his motor boats succeed in cutting the water faster than those of Gar Wood, another sizable sum of money will have been expended with speed as very nearly the only objective, since the increased cost, noise and risk offset the few additional miles an hour for the great body of amateur boatmen who form the market for such products.

An Age of Speed.

Sir Henry's enterprise is one of many which suggest that this is an "age of speed," an age in which speed is worshiped as a sort of demigod. Speed presides over prestige, and, often enough, opens the gate to economic success and the realization of fortunes in varied fields; but even when it does none of these things it finds devotees who ask nothing but speed, speed, and more speed.

In motoring, in boating, in aviation, in all forms of travel we hear the cry, Faster, Faster! Millions of dollars have been expended in making the automobile capable of stepping "from six to sixty miles per hour in sixty seconds." Every week-end throughout the Summer our lakes and rivers are given over to speed enthusiasts, who seek to excel one another with outboard motor boats or six-meter yachts. The Schneider Cup and the Pulitzer races have evoked the spending of vast sums in the effort to squeeze just a few more miles to the minute out of airplanes.

These samples of speed only scratch the surface. In communications untold millions have been spent and untold more received in enabling man to send his ideas across continents and oceans with the speed of light. In commerce, railroads vie to see who shall go fastest from New York to Chicago or San Francisco. Great steamship lines spend millions in the construction of vessels that will top a competitor's best efforts by two or three knots. Even the man who mends your shoes may base his trade upon the fact that he will resole them with more speed than a business rival; in fact, "while you wait."

Speed, in its practical application to modern life, has an enemy in economics. The question is, will it pay? The cost of preliminary experiments and actual construction of Sir Henry's record-breaking car has been put at $250,000. Mass production of such a car would, of course, cost far less, but even at that it would be expensive, and who would buy the car?

The opposing curves of speed and financial return are just as important in the construction of ocean liners. Passengers will pay higher fares for speedier passage, but when a certain point is reached an enormous addition to the size and power of the propelling plant effects but a small increase in speed. At the same time there is less room for cargo and passengers. This makes it unlikely that the present records for ocean liners will ever be greatly undercut, but navies, which need not consider revenues, may build destroyers, cruisers and airplane carriers which could run away from the fastest commercial liner afloat.

In aviation, speed and economy again come into conflict. The bigger the motor, the greater the speed. But more gasoline is needed and soon a point is reached where what the aviators call pay load has been reduced to nil. When A. H. Orlebar flew at 368.8 miles an hour last Summer in the Schneider Cup race he was traveling faster than any other man in history, but there was no room for a passenger and his motor drank gasoline so rapidly that, despite his rate of progress, he could fly only a small fraction of the distance covered by the long-distance flyers at less than a third of the speed.

Overcoming Difficulties.

But man's gluttony for speed will not be stayed by such considerations. If he cannot travel faster than at present because of technical deficiencies, he will overcome those deficiencies. Year by year he learns to go a little faster on water, land and in the sky. As he approaches the limitations of available systems of propulsion, he seeks out new ones.

A hundred years ago and more, the breeding of faster horses and the construction of lighter coaches seemed to offer a means of increasing speed. The increase was too slow. Then came the steam locomotive and steel tracks. Man has used them and developed them for years, but economics and safety limit the speed to about a mile a minute.

The airplane at present is not of much use to commerce at greater speeds than twice that of the railroad train. The dirigible rate is lower than that of the heavier-than-air machine. While universities and manufacturers spend millions studying how to add a few miles here and a few more there, man already turns to still another means of propulsion.

To the Chinaman who invented the rocket many centuries ago, it probably did not occur that man would one day be so fanciful as to attempt to accompany one of these artificial meteors on its flaming flight. A few years ago, indeed, any sane person would have laughed at such an idea as a madman's dream, yet today, in the mania for speed, it has already become a reality. Only last September Fritz von Opel took off in a rocket plane and flew.

He flew only a mile or so and his speed was lower than that of most airplanes, nevertheless he had made use of a means of propulsion that offers potentialities far in excess of any devices yet perfected.

A vehicle propelled by rockets is independent of the surrounding medium in that it needs nothing to push against. The oarsman in his skiff proceeds forward by pushing backward against the water. The screw of the ocean liner does the same thing, though more efficiently. The propeller of the airplane pushes the air backward, as any one knows who has inadvertently found himself in the slip stream as a plane takes off.

Due to the characteristics of the medium, whether it be water or air, there are certain limitations to vehicles dependent upon such an outside agency for propulsion. Not so with the rocket-propelled vehicle, for, as Newton propounded 200 years ago, "action and reaction are equal and opposite." A rocket car, ascending to the region of vacuum outside the earth's atmosphere, would lose thereby none of its force of propulsion. On the contrary, its speed would be increased by virtue of the absence of air resistance.

The answer to man's craving for speed may rest in this form of transportation, it may rest in another, but, with scientists joining the fiction writers in speculating about flights through space to the moon or to Mars, one wonders whether man's craving for speed will be satisfied by anything short of the cosmic speed of the planets and stars. Man can already send messages and pictures with the speed of light. Will he one day hurl himself through space like Jove, with the speed of lightning?

A LAMP THAT MAKES REVOLVING WHEELS APPEAR TO STAND STILL

IT is no longer necessary to stop airplane propellers or revolving wheels to inspect or study them. A propeller may cut through the air at 1,000 revolutions a minute or at even greater speed, yet the lettering and insignia on the fast-moving blade can be read as easily as if it were standing still. A new lamp, called the stroboglow, does the trick. It was invented by a trio of Westinghouse engineers—D. D. Knowles, L. R. Peters and W. E. Bahles.

The stroboglow is simple and compact; in fact, it fits into an ordinary suitcase. When the beam of light is thrown upon the whirling propeller of an airplane the blade's quivers and engine-valve action can be seen with the unaided eye. The propeller seems to stand still. The engineers point out that because of the importance of having the propeller and engine in perfect condition it is expected that the stroboglow may be made a part of an airplane's required inspection before it hops off.

A Convenient Device.

The instrument is so compact that it can be taken easily to the moving object which the engineers desire to observe. They can watch the amount of slip of a belt moving on a pulley, the vibration of meshed gears in factory machines and the movement of valves in gasoline engines. The lamp is said to be so efficient that the speed of extremely small motors can be accurately measured. The actual difference in the revolutions per minute between motors, turbines, disks or other units revolving at approximately the same speeds can be counted. In fact, anything that moves is made to appear motionless when in the glow of this magic lamp.

It is pointed out that a great advantage of the stroboglow is its suitability for use in the field or on the job without the necessity of trying to duplicate actual conditions in a laboratory.

The basic principle upon which this instrument operates consists of neon lamps and timing apparatus which causes the lights to flash momentarily any desired number of times a second. The secret of the stroboglow's magic is hidden in the frequency of its light flashes.

How the Instrument Works.

"To make the propeller of an airplane seem to stand still, although the breeze it stirs up attests to the fact that it is rotating at high speed," said Dr. D. L. Ulrey, Westinghouse research engineer, "the stroboglow is caused to flash as many times in a second as the propeller makes revolutions a second. The light flashes at the exact instant the propeller reaches a certain position in each revolution. It is seen only when it is in this position and it remains unseen at other times because the light is out while the blade is in all other positions in each revolution. The intermittent flashes of the stroboglow are in such rapid succession that the light seems to glow steadily and continuously. We can whirl a disk bearing an emblem at high speed, but it always 'stops' instantly when the stroboglow's flashes match its speed."

A PORTABLE SMITHY.

ROY PERRY, a Harrison, Me., blacksmith, still has a profitable trade despite the decline in the village smithy. He has a portable anvil and forge which he loads into a light motor truck. All through that section of southwestern Maine most of the farmers have telephones. When a horse needs shoeing they just call up Perry, who brings his smithy to the horse.

X-RAYS ARE NOW WIDELY USED

They Are Tools of Science in Many Fields

ALMOST since its discovery the X-ray has been of enormous advantage to surgery, but its usefulness in other fields was not realized until after years of intensive investigation by physicists. Professor Richtmyer of Cornell, whose leadership in this work has just been recognized by Franklin Institute in awarding him the Louis E. Levy Medal, describes here what is now known of this mysterious form of "light" and how it is speeding the advance of science and industry.

By Dr. F. K. RICHTMYER.

TO most laymen the X-ray is merely a strange sort of emanation that enables the dentist or surgeon to see things he could not otherwise see. The apparatus for creating such effects is regarded as sufficiently perfected, and it is not realized that in laboratories throughout the world the study of these invisible vibrations is one of man's most important weapons in wresting from nature her innermost secrets.

Nor is this work of purely academic interest. On the contrary, the labors of the scientist in his laboratory, which in their early form offered the surgeon a new instrument for saving lives, are now bearing fruit in many other fields as well. Almost every industry that uses metal is benefiting by them. The latest researches indicate that they may even be the means of man's snatching from nature her prerogative of devising new species of animals.

The history of the X-rays, from their inception down to the present day, furnishes a dramatic illustration of the value of research in pure science. If some hypothetical medical association, in 1895, had offered a sum of $1,000,000 for the best method of assisting surgeons in setting broken bones there would doublesss have been a large number of aspirants for the prize. But it is safe to say that not one of them would ever have thought of studying vacuum tubes, the discharge of electricity through gases and kindred phenomena with which Röntgen was "playing" in his laboratory in Würzburg in October of that year, when, quite fortuitously, he discovered those penetrating radiations which we now call X-rays.

Many Applications of Rays.

Only a few such scientific discoveries are made each century. Yet it is probable that, if an accounting could be made in dollars and cents of the value to the human race of only the medical uses of X-rays, a sum would be reached which would be larger by far than all the money spent for scientific research in all the universities of the world during the last fifty years.

Practical applications of X-rays are, however, by no means confined to medicine. One of the frequent causes of failure in metal parts subjected to the severe strains required in such modern devices as airplanes, automobiles or steam turbines is the existence of internal flaws which are not revealed until the metal breaks.

By means of X-rays these hidden defects can be detected, at least if the material is not too thick, in much the same way as the surgeon locates a fractured bone. Further, by means of studies made possible by X-rays, some fundamental advances have been made of our knowledge of the way in which metals are affected by rolling, heat-treatment and the like.

X-rays are produced in a device known as an X-ray tube in which electrons, emitted by a heated filament similar to a filament in an automobile headlight, are driven by an electric potential difference of many thousands of volts against a solid body called a target. X-rays originate at the place in the tube where these swiftly moving electrons are suddenly brought to rest. From this area on the target, known as the focal spot, there is emitted the X-ray radiation.

An analogy may assist the reader in visualizing the process. If bird-shot be poured from a cup into a metal pan held several feet below the cup, a sound will be emitted as a result of the bird-shot striking the pan. This sound is roughly analogous to the X-ray beam. The cup corresponds to the heated filament of the tube; the bird-shot correspond to the electrons; the pan corresponds to the target and the place in the pan where the bird-shot strikes is the focal spot.

It was a long time following the discovery of X-rays before their nature was clearly understood. In 1912 an important discovery by three Germans, Laue, Friederich and Knipping, showed unmistakably that X-rays are waves very much like ordinary light waves except of much shorter wave length. A notable extension of their investigations was the development of the X-ray spectrometer by Sir William Bragg, as a result of which it became almost as easy to study the X-ray spectrum as it was to study the visible spectrum.

Basis of Present Analysis.

It was found a century ago that the visible spectrum emitted by a given substance contains bright lines characteristic of that element. This discovery forms the basis of the present spectroscopic analysis, as a result of which the chemist is able to detect with certainty not only the composition of materials but very minute impurities therein.

In a similar way the X-ray spectrum contains bright lines which are characteristic of the material of which the target is composed. There is, however, at least superficially, an important difference between bright lines in the visible region of the spectrum and the bright lines in the X-ray region in, that the X-ray line spectra of all the elements contain similar lines, the only difference being that as one goes from one element to another the lines are shifted, the heavier elements giving rise to lines of shorter wave length.

With the development of our concepts of atomic structure in which the atom was visualized as being comprised of a central positively charged nucleus around which electrons revolve in various orbits, scientists came to understand that the lines in the visible part of the spectrum originate from electron disturbances at the surface of the atom, whereas the X-ray lines, which are of much shorter wave length, originate in electron disturbances in the centre of the atom.

By a careful study, therefore, of X-ray spectra much information was gained with regard to the nature of the interior of atoms. X-rays have provided us, as it were, with a kind of supermicroscope, as a result of which we can "see" not only the interior of the human body and of metal castings, but even the innermost part of the atom itself.

If one looks at a few grains of table salt, known to the chemist as sodium chloride, with an ordinary magnifying glass, one observes that these grains show a tendency toward a cubical structure. Each grain is, in fact, a minute crystal, generally imperfect, because it is broken up. It is possible by straightforward physical methods to compute the number of atoms of sodium and chlorine combined which go to make up a sodium chloride crystal of given size. And by means of X-rays it is possible to study the way in which these atoms are piled together to make the crystal. We may think of a rock-salt crystal as a kind of three-dimensional checkerboard with the sodium and chlorine atoms arranged alternately in regular rows, columns and layers. A crystal in the form of a cube one inch on the edge contains approximately 700,000,000,000,000,000,000,000 atoms.

The Nature of Matter.

Similar studies of other materials by means of X-rays have revealed that practically all solids have a crystalline structure. One who visits the mineralogical collection of any museum of natural history is impressed with the great variety of crystalline forms which the various minerals exhibit. By means of X-rays the arrangement of the atoms in these crystals has been studied and we are coming gradually to be able to interpret many of the properties of materials in terms of their crystalline structure.

Among the most important and fascinating of recent developments in X-rays is the application of the rays in the field of biology. The student of evolution has always been puzzled in his attempts to explain how the different species of plants and animals originated. If carefully selected and fertilized corn be planted the plant produces corn of the same kind as the seed. Now and then, however, it happens that the offsprings of plants and animals show differences from the parent stock, the agency for producing which was not at all understood.

It has recently been found, however, that seeds of plants and eggs of insects exposed to X-ray radiation will develop a very large number of progeny quite different in characteristics from the parents. Here, then, the biologist apparently has at his disposal a laboratory method for producing new species. The importance of this discovery cannot be overestimated. Its bearing upon the theory of evolution is obvious.

It has been suggested, for example, that perhaps the mutations in plants and animals which occur in nature have been due to the action of cosmic rays on living matter. Quite apart from the importance of this discovery in biological theory, one can imagine the use which the plant breeder, for example, will make of this new effect.

Change Your Oil Filter Cartridge Every 10,000 Miles

After this mileage the filtering unit ceases to function as it has become filled with dirt, sludge and abrasive material taken from the oil. Replacing the cartridge every 10,000 miles means saving in wear, less frequent repair bills and real oil economy as the motor oil can be used for 2000 miles or more.

PACKARD STANDARD EIGHT PRICES REDUCED $400

THE Packard Motor Car Company has advised us that effective May 28th prices of all current models of the Standard Eight have been reduced $400. The new prices are as follows:

Closed Models

5-Passenger Sedan	$2085
2-Passenger Coupe	2125
2-Passenger Convertible Coupe	2150
5-Passenger Coupe	2275
5-Passenger Club Sedan	2275
7-Passenger Sedan	2385
7-Passenger Sedan Limousine	2485

Open Models

2-Passenger Runabout	$2025
4-Passenger Phaeton	2025
7-Passenger Touring	2125
4-Passenger Sport Phaeton	2325

(Prices f. o. b. Detroit)

These reductions are made because the factory expects to announce in the Fall new cars which, though the same in size and of practically unchanged appearance, will have enough changes to classify them as new models. The new cars, like those we are now offering, will, of course, have straight eight motors exclusively.

The new prices give today's purchasers a very great price advantage, and also immediate use of the largest selling and most popular car in the fine car field.

Now, it is even more true—by $400—that you are paying for a Packard. Why not own one? You will never have a better opportunity.

Two-thirds of those who buy the Packard Standard Eight give up other makes of cars. Thousands prefer to buy out of income. Your used car will be accepted as cash and if of average value will more than make the down payment on a new car.

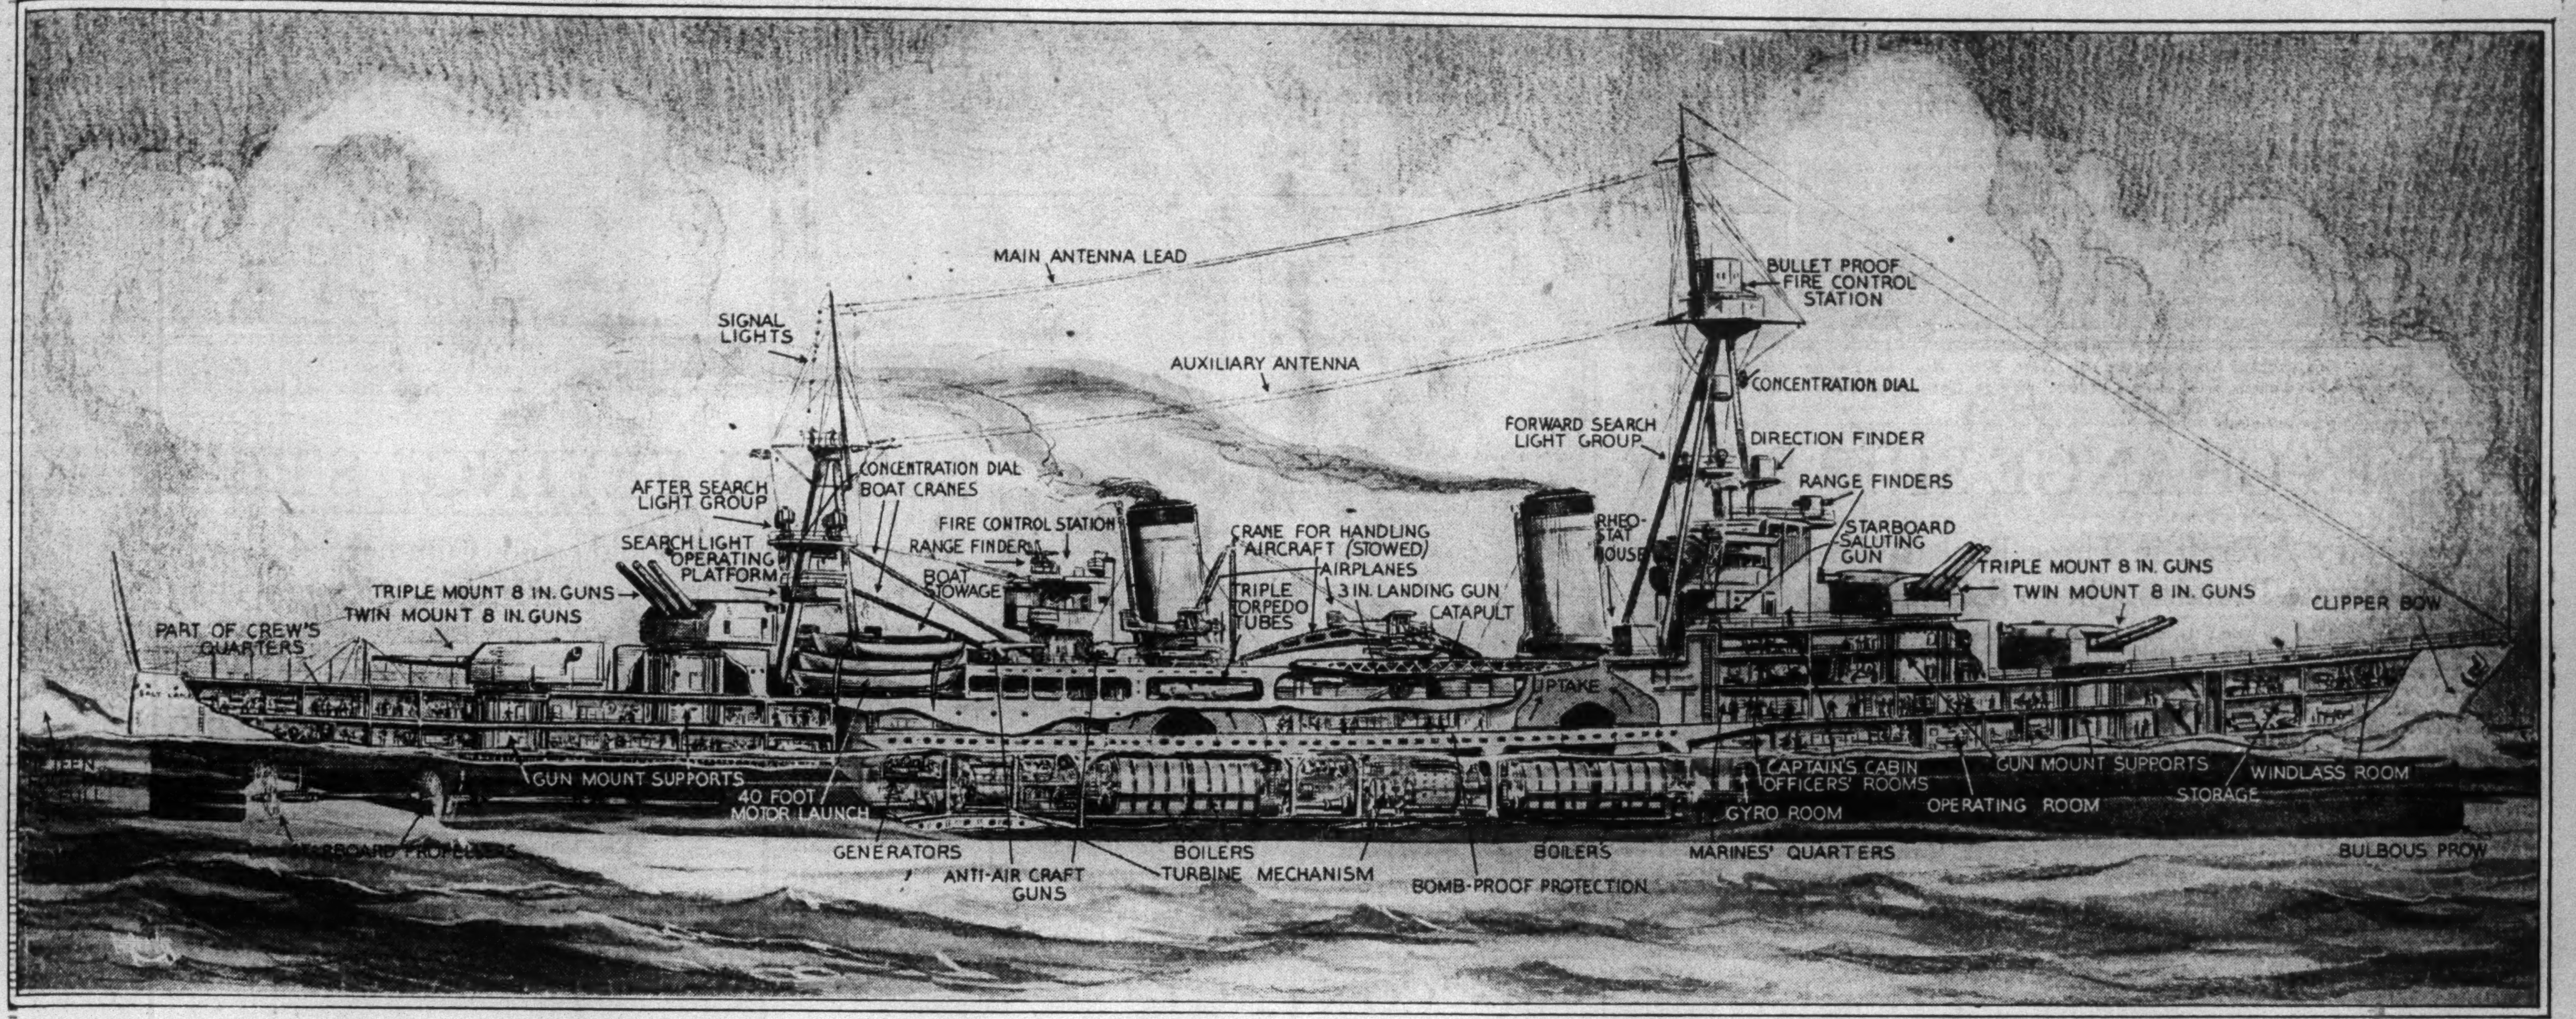
AMERICA'S TWO NEW CRUISERS ARE UNIQUE

Immense Power, High Speed, Offensive and Defensive Armament Are Combined in the Salt Lake City and Pensacola Which, Carrying Ten 8-Inch Long-Range Guns, Correspond to the Ten-Thousand-Ton Limitation Fixed by the Washington Treaty for All Naval Powers



Drawing and Descriptive Material Courtesy of the Navy Department.

DIAGRAMMATIC DRAWING OF THE NEW 10,000-TON CRUISER SALT LAKE CITY, WHICH EMBODIES THE MOST RECENT DEVELOPMENTS IN NAVAL ARCHITECTURE.

By MORGAN G. FARRELL.

THE Salt Lake City and the Pensacola are America's newly commissioned answers to the enormous cruiser expansion program of the powers. They are the first of the so-called 8-inch cruisers, which have been the centre of discussion at the recent conference for the reduction of naval armaments in London.

Their ten long-range 8-inch guns set them in a class by themselves as modern, high-speed cruisers go. None of the other powers has in commission any vessels of this class with as powerful a main battery, except Japan. To be sure, there has been much talk of the German Ersatz Preussen with her six 11-inch guns, but her designed speed is only 26 knots, against the Salt Lake City's trial speed of 32.5 knots. Besides, she is but 20 per cent completed and progressing slowly through lack of funds.

Our two cruisers represent, perhaps, the finest balance of all the requisite peace and war time qualities of any vessels of their type now afloat and ready for sea. For, while a warship may reach the climax of her destiny in a two-hour running fight or a frantic dash through the flashing thunder of a great naval engagement, she is also a home and a training school for several hundred men for months at a time.

The two ships of the Pensacola class have a high degree of habitability, power, speed, protection, offensive and defensive armament, manoeuverability and radius of action. Thus they combine in a ship of 10,000 tons, full-load displacement, all the requisite features of a fighting unit ready for instant service in wartime with the facilities for training in peacetime the men upon whom the cruiser's usefulness depends.

An Impression of Speed.

Everybody who loves ships can feel the beauty of the Salt Lake City's swift, graceful lines. The rake of the funnels and top-masts adds no little to the impression of speed. Other features, important to notice, are the 8-inch-gun mounts (sometimes, but incorrectly, called turrets) in pairs fore and aft, the anti-aircraft battery, the triple torpedo tubes on the main deck near the after funnel and the catapults for launching planes, which are between the funnels.

Many fast cruisers in other navies have no armor protection whatever, that is to say that there is nothing to stop the shells except the five-eighths inch or three-quarters inch plates of the hull, which are about as useful for that purpose as so much wallboard.

The Pensacola and Salt Lake City have side armor belts of specially hardened steel to protect the vital engine and boiler rooms. The protective deck is of the same steel, three inches thick. Horizontal protection is of great importance in these days of long-range fighting, because the guns are elevated to such an angle (forty-five degrees) that the shells come plunging down upon the deck rather than against the sides of a ship, which offer, relatively, a much smaller target.

The gun mounts are also protected by one-and-one-half inch armor. The hulls of the ships are divided into upward of eighteen water-tight compartments by transverse bulkheads, the doors of which are controlled, either individually or from central stations, in accordance with general practice in both navy and merchant marine. They also have double skins for further protection. In fact, both ends and all top hamper of these cruisers could be shot away and they would still remain afloat.

As a still further protection, the oil and water tanks are placed along the sides. Both liquids being incompressible, it would be quite possible for a shell, which pierced the outer skin of the tank, to be spent before it reached the inner one or before it exploded.

There are three 8-inch 55-calibre rifles in each of the upper gun-mounts and two in each of the lower ones. Their range is some fifteen miles. This gives a heavy concentration of fire ahead and astern and, of course, twice that weight on each broadside. As an 8-inch projectile for these guns weighs about 250 pounds, they cannot be loaded by hand as the 6-inch guns can. They are, therefore, loaded mechanically, which makes their rate of fire about half that of the smaller guns.

Anti-Aircraft Defense.

There are two 5-inch 25-calibre anti-aircraft guns on each side of the ship. They can also be used as a side battery against other vessels. The ship has a number of smaller guns for anti-aircraft use, saluting and for landing parties.

The fire control is directed from two principal stations, one on the foremast, the other on a structure just abaft the after funnel. From these points all the guns can be controlled, so that if one is put out of action the other can carry on. The anti-aircraft gun control is on the bridge. The electrical communication systems are so laid out that they will still be operative after a large section has been shot away.

Torpedo tubes are now seldom mounted singly. Those of the Salt Lake City are mounted in two batteries of three each, one on each side of the ship. Thus they are all aimed together and served by the same crew. If the first torpedo misses its mark there are still two, ready to improve on its aim.

The catapult for launching planes is now standard equipment for all warships. The movies have made it a familiar sight—shooting a plane off the deck of a ship. Incidentally, they are actually shot off with a charge of powder. It is a more positive and satisfactory means of propulsion than the compressed air originally used for the purpose.

Fast cruisers, when operating with a battleship squadron, have always been regarded as the eyes of the fleet. It is their task to do scouting duty ahead of and on the flanks of the main force, to make contact with the enemy and to report his movements.

The radio greatly increased their usefulness in discharging this essential duty. With it came the airplane, which carried naval reconnoissance into another dimension. The plane, indeed, has become the super-eye of the fleet.

The Salt Lake City carries four of them. They can be used together or held partly in reserve. With the cruiser traveling at railroad speed toward the veil of smoke on the horizon that may mean an enemy fleet in force, the plane is shot from the catapult with amazing velocity, dips slightly and, rising, soars away to heights which command a view of the entire approaching armada.

Radio From the Air.

The pilot radios his findings to his commander, who relays it to the flagship of his own fleet. Then he comes down, settling in the water beside his ship, which has stopped to pick him up. His plane is hoisted on deck and lashed down.

The engine room of a vessel is always the most interesting part of it to layman and expert alike. There are two engine rooms on the Salt Lake City. She has four screws and four complete, self-contained sets of turbines. Two are in the forward engine room and two in the after, with all their auxiliaries, lighting generators, &c. The boilers, too, are divided into sets of batteries, separated not only by bulkheads but by a considerable distance as well.

One whole set of boilers and turbines could be put out of action and the ship would still be able to navigate. The importance of this feature of the design is obvious.

The combined horsepower of the turbines for full speed ahead reaches the tremendous total of 107,000. This is almost twice as much as that of a great liner like the Berengaria, whose horsepower is 62,000, and whose speed is 22.5 knots. When one considers that this enormous power is carried in a 10,000-ton ship (as compared with the Berengaria's 52,226 tons) it is easily understandable that her hull design must be both stanch and compact. The Salt Lake City is 585 feet 6 inches long, 63 feet 11½ inches wide on the load-water line, and her mean draught is 17 feet 6 inches. Her machinery weighs 2,161 tons, more than one-fifth the full load weight of the ship. Compared to the great Cunarder she looks like a big destroyer, but with double the horsepower she has made 32.5 knots on her trials.

High Speed Maintained.

That the new warships can sustain high speed was demonstrated by a phenomenal five-day run made by the Raleigh, one of the preceding class of cruisers, about the middle of May. She covered the distance from Valparaiso, Chile, to Balboa, Canal Zone (3,200 sea-miles), in 4 days, 18 hours. This is an average speed of 28.07 knots, nearly thirty-three miles an hour.

Compare this with the speed of the Bremen, the new flier of the North German Lloyd on her record trip—27.91 knots. While on the subject of the new German steamers it may be recalled that one of the features of their design, upon which great stress was laid as a contributing factor to their high speed, is the bulbous underwater bow.

The two cruisers have this same form of bow, the invention of which is generally credited to Rear Admiral D. W. Taylor, United States Navy, one of the world's greatest naval designers. It was first used on one of our older battleships (the Delaware, it is said), and has been an accepted part of hull design of our warships ever since.

Each ship has eight White-Forster water-tube boilers, especially designed for quick steaming. They have smaller tubes than the land type. They also have thirteen oil-burners on each boiler, operating at an oil pressure of 300 pounds per square inch. The steam pressure is also 300 pounds per square inch.

The turbines are not mounted on the same shafts as the screws. They are placed beside the propeller shafts, which they drive through a set of giant reducing gears, about as the motor of an automobile turns the drive shaft by way of the transmission gears.

The turbine unit for each propeller has not one but four turbines: one high pressure, one low pressure, one cruising and one backing turbine. Thus the ship has sixteen turbines in its complement of main engines.

The cruising turbine is mounted on the main shaft as the high-pressure turbine, but is detachable from it by means of a powerful clutch. As the cruising turbine drives the important auxiliaries like the oil and air pumps it must be running continuously when the ship is under way. It is disconnected from the high-pressure turbine and operates independently only when the ship is running at full speed.

Cruising Speed 21 Knots.

The combined horsepower of the cruising turbines is 17,000 and the cruising speed is twenty-one knots. The other turbines are used in the cruising hook-up according to the speed required.

The ships are capable of doing thirty knots with only 60 per cent of their total power. It takes the remaining 40 per cent to get the extra 2.5 knots. This explains the enormous horsepower required by fast ships. Each fraction of a knot gain in speed above thirty knots requires additional thousands of horsepower.

The backing turbines are in the same casing with the low-pressure turbine. How much power they have is evinced by the remarkable performance of the Pensacola, which was brought to a full stop from thirty knots in three ships' lengths without any great vibration.

The turbines are not all of the same make. The ahead sets are Parsons, the cruising Zoelly and the astern Curtis. Each make has certain characteristics which make it especially suitable for the purpose for which it is used.

Enough oil fuel is carried by the cruisers to enable them to cover 13,000 miles at fifteen knots without refueling. This is a highly important tactical advantage when the cruisers are acting as commerce destroyers, as any one who has read the stories of the German raiders may realize. Their greatest fear was fuel shortage.

In addition to the main engines, the Salt Lake City and her sister carry four 250-kilowatt electric generators driven by steam turbines to supply current for the electric apparatus on board and the ship's lighting system, including the searchlights. This is enough power to run a good-sized factory.

Work Done Electrically.

All work that can be done electrically is executed by motors. In fact, electric operation of auxiliaries, ammunition hoists, capstans, ventilating blowers, gun training and elevating is carried further than in any previous type of warship.

To crowd so much into a ship whose displacement at full load, without fuel or reserve boiler feed-water supply, was limited by the Washington Treaty of 1921 to 10,000 tons involved the exercise of the utmost ingenuity in weight saving. So important was this consideration that a bonus was paid the shipbuilders for saving weight and a heavy penalty was imposed for overweight.

All material not essential to the strength of the ship's structure was ruthlessly eliminated, and all necessary parts built of the lightest-weight material possible. Aluminum, instead of the customary steel, was used for partitions, fittings and even furniture and lockers.

The new art of welding steel structures not only eliminates rivets, whose aggregate weight in a vessel of this size runs into tons, but also permits the use of lighter angles, channels and other steel shapes, because they are not weakened by punching holes in them to receive the rivets.

Employment of Welding.

Therefore, the internal bulkheads, minor steel decks, booms for hoisting small boats and planes aboard ship have been welded. As the art develops it will be used to still greater advantage in the construction of future vessels of this type.

The illustration shows that the main deck of the Salt Lake City extends the full length of the vessel. In most cruisers of this class the deck extends from the bow to the forward funnel. Beyond that point it is cut away. Our cruisers, therefore, are much more roomy. Indeed, the quarters are as comfortable as those of a liner, especially as they are well away from the engine and boiler rooms. The ship's complement is forty-four officers and 568 enlisted men.

Cruisers of this class are of vital importance in the defense of our foreign-trade routes. They are designed to protect our commerce against small cruisers and fast merchant ships armed with 6-inch guns and converted into raiders. The more powerful the cruisers the better chance they have to defeat these ships or scouts operating with an enemy fleet.

THE FLOW OF RIVERS TESTED IN THE LABORATORY

Models Show What the Current Will Do In Relation to Engineering Projects

WATER power is a point at issue for many a State Governor, Legislature and public utility corporation. It is also a question in many a laboratory and over many an engineer's draughting-board. The unknown quantities for the engineer are not political and economic considerations, but questions of erosion and other tricks of swirling streams. They are virtually impossible to determine except by experiment. The accompanying article describes the contribution that is being made by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology to engineers' water power problems.

By Prof. KENNETH C. REYNOLDS

KNOWLEDGE of the laws governing the movement of water is very limited, and, with the growth in our civilization, the need for a more complete understanding of many hydraulic phenomena becomes the more acute. Out of the past have come statements of some laws about the flow of water. However, at their best they form but the framework on which the science of hydraulics is being built.

Suppose that a bridge pier is to be constructed in a swiftly moving river. What form and size of pier will cause the least amount of digging out of the river bed by the water? Or if a ship's dock is to be extended into a river, what changes in the water depth will occur in the vicinity? Or what kind of barriers should be constructed in a harbor so that the velocity of the water will keep the harbor from becoming shoal, and thus avoid the continual expense of dredging?

In the past the design of such hydraulic structures has been by the trial method. If, after thousands of dollars had been spent in construction, the structure proved to be satisfactory, then the design was praised. Otherwise the structure had to be altered until the desired result was attained.

Such had been the status of the science of hydraulics up to the last century. At various times some great hydraulicians tried to solve perplexing problems by the construction of a model of the proposed structure. Then, after water had flowed over the model in a way to simulate natural conditions, changes in design were made until the results were satisfactory. Possibly the standard design proved to be too conservative, or it was found that the results could be realized by utilizing a much cheaper structure, or some other design proved to be simpler.

The First Laboratory.

By 1898 the need for a laboratory for studying hydraulic models was apparent, and in that year was constructed the first river hydraulic laboratory in which engineering problems were studied by the use of models. This first laboratory was founded at the Technical University in Dresden, and proved to be a huge success. Other similar laboratories were later founded in Germany, and now scarcely any hydraulic project in that country is constructed until a model of it has been carefully studied to determine the best and most economical design.

The river hydraulic laboratory in Karlsruhe, for example, conducted experiments on the main dike in the Zuider Zee, in Holland, the construction of which will make more than 500,000 acres of new arable land available. Models of the proposed dike and drainage sluices were made to determine the most effective and economical design. It has been the experience in these foreign laboratories that often the money saved in changing the design more than covered the complete cost of the experiment.

River hydraulic laboratories have been established not only in Germany, but in Austria, Sweden, Switzerland, England and, to some extent, in other European and in Asiatic countries. And now, similar laboratories are being founded here in the United States. One of the most important is now in operation at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

One of the problems being studied in this laboratory concerns a hydro-electric project to be constructed on the Monugaup River in Southern New York, and in the laboratory at Technology has been built an exact reproduction of the spillway and earth sections of the dam, as well as of the storage reservoir upstream and the river downstream. Most of the miniature structures were built of concrete, although below the dam is to be found small-scaled gravel to imitate conditions in nature. The model is some 18 feet long and 12 feet wide, and was very carefully built so that 1 foot on the model corresponded exactly in details to 60 feet in nature; that is, the model scale was 1 to 60.

As the water plunges over the dam it tends to scour out the gravel, and, by changing the shape of the apron, it has been possible to decrease the scour and to make it occur in the ledgy section of the river. Since the apron details can be altered in but a few minutes—work which would require weeks in nature and cost thousands of dollars—it is quite evident that these model studies are the only means of insuring correct designs. Charles T. Main, Inc., of Boston are the consulting engineers on this project.

A Miniature Hydro-Electric Plant in a Laboratory.

Another model study has been made for the city of Hartford, Conn., which has recently begun the construction of a three-mile dike along the west bank of the Connecticut River in order to protect some municipal lands from flood flows. The consulting engineers on the project, Fay, Spofford & Thorndike of Boston, proposed an earth dike to be built partly from alluvial silt and partly from sand dredged from the river. But what form of cross-section would be most satisfactory? What size pumps would be needed to remove the seepage water? Would one type of construction be better and more economical than others?

To answer these and other questions, a miniature dike was constructed in a steel tank twenty feet long, one face of which is glass. The model is an exact duplicate of the proposed dike, but is only one-fifteenth as large. It was built up of the same materials as will be used in nature and with similar construction methods.

Studies Carefully Made.

These studies were made with water at the normal flood stage of the river and also at maximum flood stage. In order to follow the path of the water as it seeped through the materials, dyes were injected into the face of the dike and their telltale traces of color were recorded by photographs. On the back of the tank are some forty pressure gauges, whereby it is possible to record the exact pressure conditions within the dike. Even miniature waves were produced so that the effect of wave action might be studied.

Two different models have been studied and the information gained has been of immeasurable value in determining the type of dike to be used. These studies mark an innovation for cities of the United States, and the city of Hartford is probably one of the first municipalities to use scientific research of this nature in the proper solution of its river correction problem.

A miniature river is now under construction in this unique laboratory. The Connecticut River in the vicinity of Northampton, Mass., is heavily eroding its banks, so that highways are being threatened and agricultural land is being lost in the river. The State Department of Public Works wishes to determine the most satisfactory and economical way of protecting the river banks against this erosion. The model river is being built with a scale in length of 1 to 200, and is about 60 feet long. Sand will form the river bed, and as the water, in properly reduced quantities, flows along, studies will be made of the effect of various types of corrective devices.

Thus, instead of spending money on some project only to find that it does not accomplish the desired results, or of trying to use a method which may not be the most economical, engineers find by the use of models a quick, satisfactory and relatively inexpensive way of solving problems, not only in the layout of hydro-electric projects or the design of dikes, but in the improvement of rivers and harbors and also in the solution of pure research problems.

To aid in the solution of the latter, as well as to facilitate other studies, a glass-walled channel is now being planned which will be about forty-five feet long and one and one-half feet wide. By the use of such a channel, the currents around various structures or the flow over wiers, dams and the like may be minutely studied.

Many other important problems await solution, such as the movement of gravel bars in rivers, the regulation and correction of rivers, the improvement of harbors. From these studies not only more satisfactory but also more economical hydraulic structures will be designed.

PLANES CHANGE SHIP ROLE

Success of Navy Aircraft in Three Recent War Games May Relegate Dreadnought to Secondary Part

By LAUREN D. LYMAN.

IN the last two years the tactical manoeuvres of the United States Navy have undergone revolutionary changes. While conservative old-line officers are still arguing over the need for and the power of the battleship as the backbone of the first line of defense, the dreadnought has quietly but, nevertheless, decisively been shifted to a position as one of the auxiliaries and its place taken by the airplane.

Recently New York City had the opportunity of watching the manoeuvres of the largest single fighting air force in the world, the aircraft squadrons of the Battle Fleet. The flights of the navy planes over New York and the cities of New England brought comment from E. E. Wilson, retired naval officer, trained in the old school of the sea and also trained in the modern methods of using naval aircraft. Mr. Wilson, now president of Sikorsky and the Hamilton Standard Steel Propeller Company, might be suspected of prejudice save for the fact that he is a convert from the older theory of naval warfare which held the battleship supreme.

Now Main Fighting Force.

"During the last few years all tactical exercises in the fleet and air forces have demonstrated conclusively its importance," Mr. Wilson said speaking before the Society of Automotive Engineers. "It has passed from the old conception of an auxiliary into the main fighting force of the fleet. The distances at which it can operate, the speeds at which it can function and the lack of protection against it makes it the most potent force in the fleet today. It has reached this position of supremacy by demonstrating to the Commander-in-Chief its true effectiveness. In recent exercises the Commander-in-Chief has frequently disposed his whole fleet to protect his aircraft carriers and has used the aircraft carriers as the main striking forces.

"This does not mean that other types of naval craft are obsolete. It simply means a revolution in the means of utilizing the forces. The fact that the naval aviation has risen to the supreme position in fleet strength indicates a tendency in transportation."

In 1927 at Honolulu, in 1928 at Panama and this year at Colon it was the aircraft carriers and the planes that delivered the blows that "won the war." It was at Honolulu that the board of strategy of the attacking forces first utilized the new tactics. There the planes from the decks of two carriers went over the naval defenders and smothered the shore troops in spite of counter attacks by aircraft, the only effective means of combating an air offensive, and not so very effective at that.

Planes Take Panama.

Last year at Panama the power of the air arm was even more dramatically demonstrated. On an arc the centre of whose radius was Panama, a great defensive fleet of battleships, destroyers and submarines spread out from shore to shore 150 miles from the objective to be attacked. Behind the line of defense was the Lexington with its fleet of eighty or more planes ready and eager to take the air to meet the fliers from the attacking carriers. Far out at sea, on a detour from the objective, was the Saratoga. She was 900 miles from the objective at which she proposed to hurl bombs within twenty-four hours. Her arc, in relation to the centre of objective, was nearly 5,000 miles in length. The defenders were powerless to locate her and were forced to wait on the lines for the attack they knew was coming.

Through the day, screened by her auxiliary defenders, the Saratoga cruised toward Panama. When night fell she went to full speed, faster than any other ship afloat, thirty-five knots. One cruiser picked her up but, according to theory, would have been put out of action by the four cruisers that formed the principal escort for the Saratoga.

The aircraft carrier approached the cordon 150 miles from Panama before daylight and then eighty-five planes left her decks. They took off in darkness and made a rendezvous in darkness—all directed by radio and under cover of the night—flew across the defended area and swooped down on Panama.

The Lexington had no chance against these winged projectiles, for that is what a torpedo plane or bomber really is. The planes from the Lexington did not leave her decks in time. Even if they had it would have been necessary to locate the attackers. In the World War it proved difficult enough to locate a cruising enemy submarine or a surface raider like the Emden making fourteen to twenty knots. The aircraft, adding another dimension to the area to be searched and making from 100 to 130 knots is triply illusive. The army planes found the same difficulty when they went up for patrol. Where was the attack coming from—east, west, north or south? As a matter of fact it came from three of the four directions. The first contingent destroyed the Miraflores and Pedro Miguel locks. Another division bombed ground fortification and a third, represented by a single plane from the Aroostook, swung in from the north and, while the defenders were busy against the other air squadrons, bombed Gatun.

At sea, the Lexington, bottled up inside the defending cordon and unable to utilize her great speed, was "destroyed" by the guns of the California. The Saratoga's defense, caught in an unexpected current, became separated from her and laid her open to the big guns from the defending battleships. However, in real war the Saratoga would have escaped by her superior speed and then called her planes in by radio.

This was done at Honolulu, when a squadron of nine planes was completely lost from sight because of a great screen thrown down by a volcano. The direction-finding radio on the aircraft carrier went into action, connected with the radio-equipped planes and brought all nine safely through the opaque cloud to the deck of the carrier.

Last January an attack of similar nature was carried out in the Caribbean, but this time the attacking force failed and the Saratoga was bombed out of the water, not by big guns, but by the airplanes from the Lexington. This time the Lexington's squadrons got the jump. The Saratoga had been ordered to come in behind an escort of slower cruisers and battleships. The big guns were her defense instead of her speed, and, according to the rules of the war game, the big guns failed to carry out their assignment. The canal was saved, for the planes from the Lexington came through on the Saratoga by starting first.

These three sets of war games, in which the aircraft carriers played the leading part, have convinced many naval strategists of the truth of the theory that the dreadnought is now an auxiliary like the submarine.

"What is the purpose of the battleship?" they ask. "Its principal duty is as a carrier for heavy armament. It is protected against heavy armament and can keep on coming when cruisers and destroyers are put out of action."

Yet the battleship is not obsolete so long as the enemy is building battleships, for the aircraft adherents do not claim that they can put the dreadnought out of action. Its decks and sides are heavily armored. The aircraft can perhaps reduce its effectiveness and cut down the accurate range of its guns tremendously by destroying its superstructure.

"The big battleship also has its limitations for it is of little use today in attacking enemy bases on land. It cannot come within range of these bases without opening itself to even bigger guns than it can carry. But why worry about the battleships?" say the naval aircraft enthusiasts. "We just wouldn't go near them. The Saratoga and Lexington can outrun any battleship or cruiser afloat and stand off out of range of the guns and send the planes over.

Carrier's Long Range.

"Furthermore, what is the purpose of armament? The Germans showed with their submarines. It is to cripple the enemy by cutting him off from his base of supplies and destroying that base. The submarine was effective enough in stopping the commercial carriers. The airplane carrier, with its speed triple that of the submarine under the surface, can be more effective than a fleet of submarines in attacking shipping and, besides, it can send its missiles from 150 miles at sea or more in on the towns and cities, the forts and munition plants of the enemy."

Let the battleships go out and engage other battleships, they say. Meanwhile the aircraft are attacking directly the shores and bases over which the battleships are pounding each other miles away.

SPEED PLANE TROPHY

C. E. Thompson Offers $5,000 as Annual Prize in Race for Land Types—Entries Groomed

By LEO A. KIERAN.

AMERICAN aviation is at last to have an annual speed classic, according to the terms of grant by Charles Edwin Thompson, of the Thompson Aeronautical Corporation of Detroit, who has posted a fund to create a prize of $10,000 this year and a $5,000 prize annually thereafter for an international race. The offer has excited comment here and abroad and it is reported that the military attachés of Italy, France and England are taking up with their governments the matter of entry in the first competition to be held in connection with the 1930 National Air Races in Chicago next September.

Walter Beech, president of the Travel Air branch of the Curtiss-Wright Corporation and designer of the Mystery S which beat the crack pursuit ships of the army and navy last year, intends entering another and faster plane for this race. Former Lieutenant Alford J. Williams has agreed to fly if he can find a plane here fast enough to be worthy. With Lieutenants John MacCready and Jimmie Doolittle at large in commercial aviation, Williams rounds out the nucleus of a sterling racing team for America.

Other interests which have pledged aid to make the race an international classic which may bring the speed record or the scene of its establishment to the United States, include the Richfield Oil Corporation and private interests which will concentrate on hand production of racing type ships comparable to those prepared for the Schneider Cup in England.

In contrast to the Schneider Cup Races, however, the Thompson competition will be limited to landplanes over a closed course. Although the highest records have been made in seaplanes because of their greater safety in forced landing and ground handling at the necessary high stalling speeds of racing planes, it has been pointed out that with the improvements made in airport runways and the retractable landing wheel gears which are now available, the landplane should be able to exceed the records made by seaplanes with floats which detract somewhat from top speeds. Recent experiments showed an increase of more than 10 per cent in the cruising speed of an ordinary military plane by retracting the wheels into the bottom fairing of the fuselage.

Geared Motors Help.

Improvements in engine gearing, which make possible higher engine speeds with less torque as the larger propellers turn at reduced engine speed, obviate the wash-in of wings and the offsetting of fins and stabilizers, all of which adds to the streamline of the plane, while increased motor revolutions step up the power range considerably without adding weight or outside dimension to the engines.

Because of the defeat of the army and navy by the Mystery S at Cleveland, and the absence of funds for speed flying by the government, it is expected that the United States military services will refrain from entering the competition this year.

PLAN EAST EUROPE TOUR.

POLAND, Rumania, Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia have agreed to an annual air tour which will start on Aug. 11 of each year and touch the capitals of all four countries, according to The Associated Press. The trip this year will start in Warsaw and touch Lwow, Prague, Zagreb, Belgrade, Bucharest, Yassy and Poznan.

SIGNIFICANT things for aviation in the United States are latent in an announcement made last Monday that the Fokker Aircraft Corporation, of which the General Motors Corporation owns 40 per cent, was to change its corporate name to the General Aviation Corporation, become a holding rather than a manufacturing company and increase its capitalization about fivefold. This step marks the definite decision of General Motors not merely to retain but to increase its stake in the business of flying.

Just what direction this increase will take remains unrevealed, but a body of informed opinion holds that the announced plans for "the acquisition of additional property for which negotiations are now being carried on" may well mean the entry of this great automotive interest into the air transport operations field. It is now assured that manufacturing programs for Fokker planes and for the Dornier flying boats, the fabrication of which in the United States is controlled by General Motors, will go on apace. It may also be that an attempt at mass distribution of planes of low and medium price—following the precedent so successfully followed in the automobile field—will ensue.

Increased activity in the invasion of foreign markets and application of the G. M. A. C. finance plans to the airplane export market may be expected with confidence. The General Motors decision puts another powerful buttress under the solidifying foundation of aviation.

OPERATION of the navy's new mobile mooring mast at Lakehurst will be watched with much interest when the Graf Zeppelin docks from her South American voyage. Tests with the Los Angeles have proved encouragingly successful. This device, designed to simplify and make safer the ground operations for dirigibles, seems to make possible the reduction of the personnel necessary to a landing by about two-thirds. If such a result can be shown in more extended tests and if, in addition, greater protection is afforded to the moored airship than under the present rather primitive system, a long step will have been taken in speeding the establishment of commercial dirigible lines.

Certainly the performance of the Graf Zeppelin under the skillful guidance of Dr. Eckener leaves little to be desired, once the craft is in the air. The difficulties which still detract from its usefulness and practical scheduled operation are mainly concerned with landings and mooring. Rapid progress in this regard may be expected from the navy's experiments.

A FURTHER spur to dirigible development looms from quite another direction. Should the so-called McNary measure, which has been introduced in the House and the Senate, become law, the government would be empowered to lend up to 75 per cent of the cost of future airships. It would place such craft on the same status as ocean-going vessels under the Jones-White bill, which has had a stimulating effect on the American merchant marine. With the practical monopoly on helium enjoyed by the United States and the mounting evidence of the utility of the great liners of the air, a bright future for the lighter-than-air side of aeronautics seems to impend.

BY a strange sort of inferiority complex it is a commonplace for Americans who have been abroad to praise the airline systems of Europe at the expense of those of their homeland. Statistics continue to disprove that there is more flying across the Atlantic. One interesting sidelight on this situation was shed by the Chamber of Commerce of Boston the other day. A study of comparative figures revealed that in the month of February 7,373 planes flew in and out of the airport at Tulsa, Okla., while 1,358 made use of the great Croydon Field which serves London. In the same period 3,136 used the Chicago airport, while 1,850 used Le Bourget and the Boston airport saw 770 take-offs and landings, while Tempelhof, Berlin, had but 658.

MOST novel of the endurance flights planned for the next few weeks perhaps is that in which two planes will try to stay up for more than a month over New York and New Jersey, changing crews by the parachute and drop-ladder method and receiving fuel from a third plane acting as nursing bottle.

THE pace of aviation is rather dramatically measured by the astonishment expressed by Admiral Byrd at the progress which has been made in the two years of his absence. He said at Balboa that he had no idea of the advances in "the size of planes, their increased speed, changes in lines and mechanical refinements." He did not know that planes had been flown on Diesel motors.

"BLIND FLYING" STRESSED

Army, at Brooks Field, and Commercial Companies Lay Growing Emphasis on Instruments Rather Than Instinct

By BEN H. PEARSE.

FLYING in a fog is not landing in one, a problem which seems to be a matter for the future; but it is a long step in advance. At Brooks Field, Texas, it is predicated upon no more complicated remedy than training for both student and experienced pilots in instrument flying.

Evidence accumulated by Captain William C. Ocker, Army Air Corps, in ten years of research indicates that pilots, although they can see their instruments in a fog, do not believe them. Captain Ocker believes that the answer to safe flying in fog lies in teaching pilots to fly by instruments and entirely disregard what they have been taught is their flying instinct.

The pilot comes by his faith in flying instinct honestly enough; it was taught him in whatever school of aviation he attended. But sixty seconds in a swivel chair with a device invented by Captain Ocker for the purpose will convince even the most skeptical student or pilot that "there ain't no such animal."

Blind flying schools are being installed in the commercial field. At Brooks Field, where Captain Ocker has been carrying on his experiments with the approval of Brig. Gen. Frank P. Lahm, commandant of the Air Corps Training Centre, and Major S. W. Fitzgerald, commandant of the field, a new type of training plane is being tested. Among other improvements, its instrument board carries a full set of instruments, while the old type was furnished with only a partial set.

Captain Ocker's invention consists of a box, inside of which is a model instrument panel. With his face pressed close to the aperture in the front of the box, the student can see only the luminous dials of the instruments.

Senses Deceive Pilot.

Seated in a swivel chair, watching only the instruments in the box, the student is turned to the right. The turn indicator shows him he is turning to the right and he feels he is turning in that direction. When the speed at which he is being turned is decreased, however, he feels as though he were turning to the left, although the turn indicator still points to the right. When the indicator shows he is no longer turning, he may still have the sensation of turning to the left.

By looking up from time to time, the student is convinced that the instruments are correct and should be relied on whether they agree with his senses or not.

It is Captain Ocker's theory that most crashes in fog are due to the pilot disregarding his instruments and trusting to his senses, as indeed he has been taught to do, in many cases with fatal results. While the instruments now available are not all that could be desired, he believes they are sufficient to enable the flier to handle his ship in a fog if he will believe them and act on what they tell him.

Instruments Prove Correct.

In support of his contention, Captain Ocker has sent back to the factory instruments which pilots declared went "haywire" while in fog. After thorough tests the factory reported that the instruments were in perfect condition and subsequent tests in clear weather confirmed their reliability. The report of a pilot who survived a crash in California several months ago shows how he instinctively trusted his senses and disregarded his instruments.

Endeavoring to climb through the storm clouds, he says, he reached an altitude of about 3,800 feet. He was conscious of a draft on his left cheek, which he took to mean he was slipping or skidding to the left. Looking at the bank and turn indicator, he discovered to his amazement that both the turn and bank pointers were to the right.

When his instrument told him that his right wing was down and the ship was making a turn to the right, and the draft on his left cheek led him to believe he was slipping or skidding to the left, which did he believe? He says:

"I at once endeavored to right my ship by raising the left wing, which met with no success, as was indicated by the draft becoming stronger. Thinking then my forward flying speed had decreased to such a point that I had no control, I at once put my stick forward to increase my speed, by this time believing myself in a left-hand tail spin."

A few moments later he "bailed out," thus living to tell the story. But when it came to the test he, like scores of others, decided in the fraction of a second allowed for such decisions to trust to his instinct.

Convincing either a student or an experienced aviator is a serious problem. The student has always relied on his instinctive sense of balance on the ground and expects to in the air. The experienced pilot who has perhaps lived through several thousand hours of flying by his senses is convinced it is a pretty good system. The pilots whose senses have betrayed them are not, of course, alive to refute the evidence.

But the little black box is a powerful persuader. Once even an experienced pilot looks into it and is given the swivel chair test he is converted. He is then ready for the second, or training, stage. He is introduced to Captain Ocker's covered cockpit plane.

Realizing the importance of this training, several commercial companies as well as the military schools have taken up blind flight instruction. At Brooks Field the little black box has done its work so well that there is a waiting list for the plane with the covered cockpit. Many of the fliers are relieved to learn that giving the wrong answer in the swivel chair test shows that they are perfectly normal. One instructor with about 3,500 hours in the air to his credit afterward confided to Captain Ocker that he had once fallen out of the clouds only to find himself upside down, but had never mentioned it for fear what he thought was a defect in his physical senses would be discovered.

Probably the most notable example of a blind flight school in the commercial field is the Pan-American school for its own pilots at Brownsville, Texas. There all pilots are required to undergo instruction in a cabin plane with the windows around the pilot's seat completely covered. They must demonstrate their ability to fly this plane before they are considered first-class pilots. Other commercial schools are taking it up.

To the pilot who says instruments go "haywire" in blind flight, Captain Ocker answers, "Believe them even when you know they're wrong."

SCHOOL....

SOLO FLYING is a daily event at the Spartan School of Aeronautics. For Spartan students—having the advantage of superior instruction, modern equipment and advanced methods—progress rapidly to the point where they fly with confidence . . . . alone.

» For those who are determined to succeed in aviation, who cannot waste time or money, who want the thrill of success as well as the the thrill of flight . . . for those Spartan training is made to order.

» No other American school of aviation offers as many advantages as Spartan:

COMPLETE COURSES: Advanced Tri-motor Transport, Transport, Limited Commercial, Private, Mechanics, Welding, and Business Administration. Flight courses include night, cross-country and acrobatic flying.

EQUIPMENT: Spartan biplanes, cabin monoplanes, all-metal tri-motor Fords.

GOVERNMENT APPROVAL: The Spartan School is approved by the U. S. Dept. of Commerce as transport ground and flying school. All flying courses are approved; instructors and planes are licensed by the U. S. Government.

FACILITIES: Spartan offers excellent living conditions—modern barracks, classrooms, lounge rooms, library and restaurant. Spartan students have access to the Spartan Aircraft factory, while the Tulsa Municipal Airport—operations base of the Southwest Air Fast Express and five other major transport lines—affords them an opportunity to study every phase of commercial aviation.

LOWER TUITION: Spartan tuition fees are lower than those of other large recognized schools. Liberal extended tuition payment plans are available for all courses. Free employment service is maintained to aid students in making sound business connections in aviation.

FREE TRANSPORTATION: Free transportation from any city in the United States to Tulsa is provided by bus, rail or air, according to the course selected.

» And, finally, Spartan is one of the most soundly financed aviation schools in the country, possessing both the purpose and the resources to remain "America's finest aviation school."

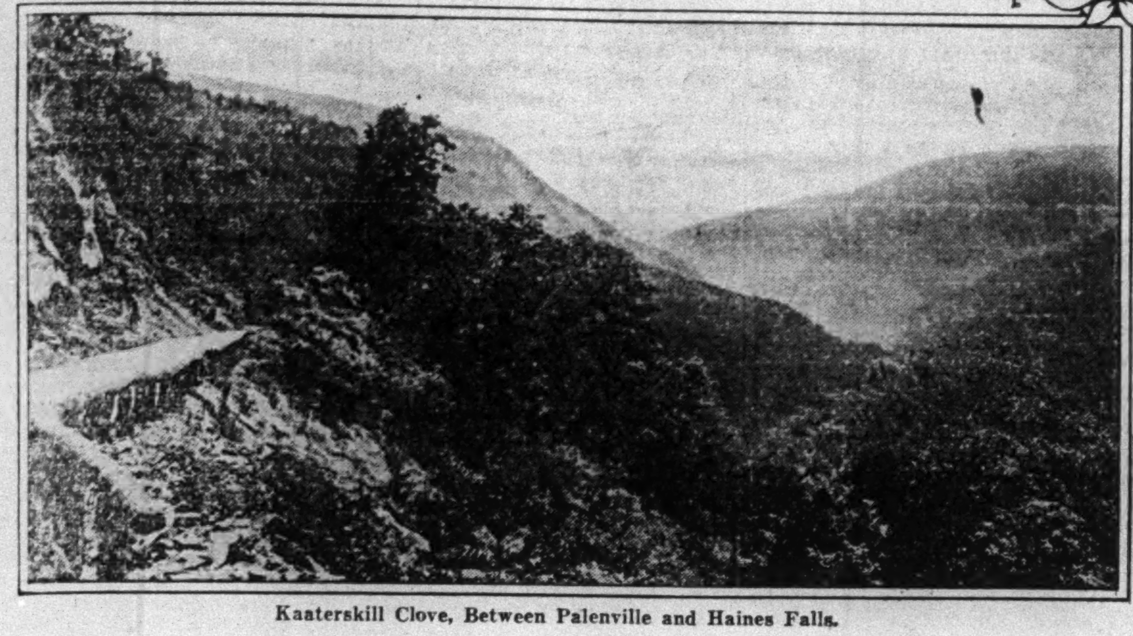
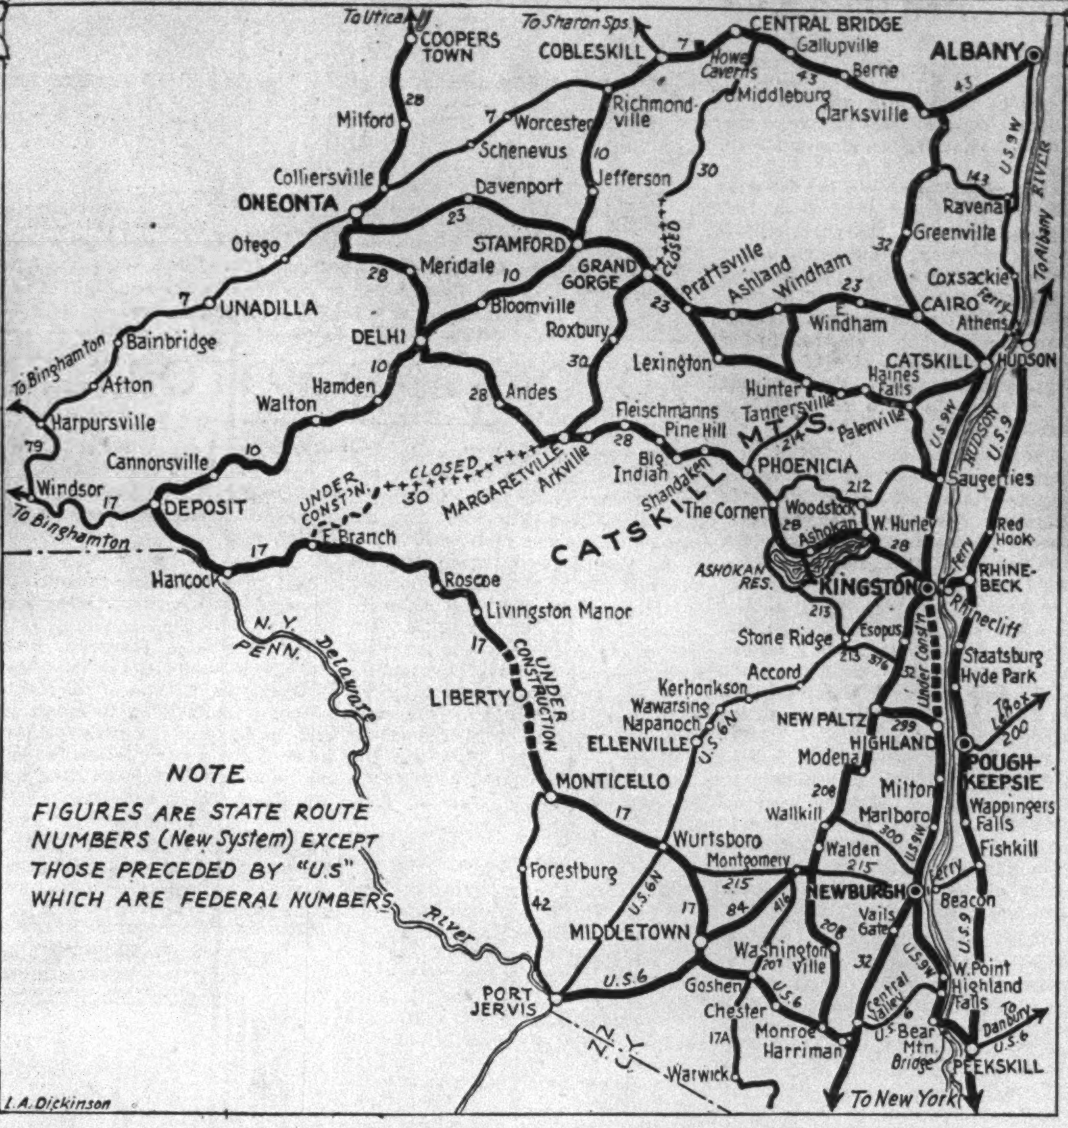
MOTORISTS ON THE ROAD—MOTORS IN THE NEWS



Kaaterskill Clove, Between Palenville and Haines Falls.



Shwangunk Mountains, on Route 17, Near Wurtsboro, N. Y.

IN THE GREEN CATSKILLS

Early Season Run Into Near-by Mountains Suggested—Rich In Scenery—Famed in Story

By LEON A. DICKINSON.

THOSE who motor out of the city for a week-end or longer in search of attractive scenery should not overlook the Catskill Mountains. Associated with Indian lore, historic episodes and the legend of Rip Van Winkle, this superb portion of the Appalachian system has been the mecca for thousands of visitors every season. The accompanying map indicates some of the best motoring routes.

The lofty and rugged plateau that really constitutes the Catskill Mountains is bounded on the east by the valley of the Hudson River. In bygone ages this stream was far wider and deeper than it is at present; its swirling waters wore down the eastern edge of the plateau until there was formed a steep escarpment. In most places this is too abrupt to be scaled in a motor car, but occasionally there will be found gorges leading upward and westward toward the summit of the cliff.

These gorges are known locally as "cloves," of which the most famous are the Kaaterskill Clove and the Plaaterkill Clove. The former begins at Palenville, a few miles southwest of Catskill, and leads upward to Haines Falls at the top of the escarpment. To the motorist this is the more important of the two because a fine paved highway has been constructed through the canyon, so well graded as to be negotiable by any car at all times. This is the principal entrance into the Catskill Mountains from the northeast and likewise the best way of reaching the popular resorts of Haines Falls, Tannersville, Elka Park.

Another entrance into the Catskills from the town of Catskill is along the so-called Mohican Trail. This leads westward into a very beautiful part of the mountains, passing first through Leeds, where the first Dutch settlement in the county was located. The ancient Van Dusen mansion and the Old Dutch Reformed Church will be found well worthy of inspection here. Nearby is Green Lake, one of the largest natural bodies of water in the Catskills. This is reached in a very few minutes by a side road through the woods.

After driving for a short time beyond Leeds the motorist will climb rather suddenly and enter the well-shaded main street of Cairo, a popular resort with fishing, boating, bathing and hunting facilities. A short side-trip of a mile or so permits a visit to the beautiful Shinglkill Falls.

In the Mountains.

A panorama of rare beauty unfolds as one proceeds westward from Cairo. First comes the pretty village of Acra; then, at East Windham, begin a series of exceptionally attractive Summer colonies, including Mount Zoar Park, Little Mountain Farms and Silver Lake. This last is on a perfect gem of a mountain lake, some 2,000 feet above sea-level and surrounded by peaks hundreds of feet higher still. Beyond East Windham the road drops somewhat, although the whole country roundabout is mountainous and the views truly magnificent.

Windham, another popular Summer resort, lies just to the westward. Here one may turn south over a good paved highway direct into Hunter and a connection with the Rip Van Winkle Trail. This is the name given to the highway leading through Kaaterskill Clove. Hensonville, still another of the numerous resorts of this region, is located just to the south of Windham along the short cut to Hunter.

The next town west of Windham along the Mohican Trail (State Route 23) is Ashland; after that one comes to Prattsville, where the Mohican and Rip Van Winkle Trails come together.

One may follow Route 23 through the Catskills to Oneonta, or, if time presses, turn southward at Grand Gorge and follow Route 30 to a connection with Route 28 at Margaretville. This latter highway is the principal artery of travel for those who enter the Catskills through the gateway of Kingston and the Ashokan Reservoir. By turning left at Margaretville, one may proceed in a general easterly direction back to the Hudson River at Kingston.

Perhaps the better known route from New York is that via the Albany Post Road, the Bear Mountain Bridge and Newburgh to Kingston. The greater part of this route as far as Newburgh is now open and in excellent condition, but the last section from Newburgh to Kingston is under construction just north of Newburgh, as well as for most of the distance between Highland and Kingston. This means delays, so many will prefer a longer alternate to the westward running through Modena and New Paltz. As a compromise, follow the river road to Highland, then turn west to New Paltz and proceed into Kingston via Route 32 through Esopus.

Those who intend using U. S. Route 9 should proceed with caution between Poughkeepsie and Wappingers Falls, as well as just north of Peekskill, where, according to the latest road bulletin of the State Division of Highways, work is now in progress.

There is also delay on Route 17 in Monroe and just west, and between Chester and Goshen. The road is under construction north and south of Liberty, but traffic is maintained.

The distances involved in this tour may be gauged from the fact that the shortest possible route from New York to Kingston covers 92 miles, and that one must travel nearly 120 miles to reach Catskill from New York.

AT THE WHEEL

By JAMES O. SPEARING

ANY one whose consideration of the municipal traffic problem is not 99.44 per cent personal and individualistic will agree that parked automobiles seriously impede the flow of vehicles through city streets. The merchants of Fifth Avenue, who oppose the abolition of parking on that thoroughfare, do not contend that parked cars offer no interference to traffic. Their contention is that, because of its character as a retail shopping district, Fifth Avenue should not be made into an express highway. They regard it as a local street and insist that parking should therefore be permitted on it. At least, that is what one gathers from statements issued by the Fifth Avenue Association from time to time.

Whether Fifth Avenue should be an express or a local street is one question, and whether the prohibition of parking on it would in fact work a hardship on the merchants is another, but there doesn't seem to be anything to question in the statement that automobiles would move faster in Fifth Avenue or any other street, local or express, if parking were prohibited. Just how much faster they would move may be a subject of dispute. There are those who contend that, even where parking is prohibited, cars must be allowed to stop at curbs for the purposes of loading and unloading both passengers and goods, and that this use of sidewalks as landings prevents the use as a traffic lane of street space adjacent to a curb. They argue therefore, that the prohibition of parking does not speed up traffic sufficiently to make the measure worth while.

Those who favor the abolition of parking in congested districts maintain, on the other hand, that, even with the permissible and occasional stopping of cars at curbs for receiving and discharging persons and freight, traffic is greatly expedited by the absence of the virtually continuous lines of standing cars that border busy streets when parking is allowed. This position is set forth in the report of the Committee on Highway Traffic Analysis of the Highway Research Board, which has just been published with the proceedings of the ninth annual meeting of the board, held in Washington last December. In this report, which is signed by the committee's chairman, George E. Hamlin, Superintendent of Maintenance, Connecticut State Highway Department, the conclusion is summed up as follows:

In many instances, especially in business districts, the prohibition of parking does not render available the full traffic capacity of a roadway because of the stopping of vehicles at the curb "temporarily for the purpose of and while actually engaged in loading or unloading." It is a fallacy, however, to presuppose that the traffic capacity of a roadway is not increased by the prohibition of parking when stopping temporarily is permitted. It has been observed that in many cases, especially during peak traffic hours, a traffic lane at the curb has been free of standing vehicles for the full length of a block. Furthermore, double parking, and loading and unloading from the second lane, are practically eliminated.

The report goes into greater detail than this. It gives fifteen specific benefits which, it is stated, result from the elimination of parked automobiles. They are listed as follows:

1. It enables vehicles at frequent space intervals to pass street cars, even on narrow streets, on the right; this being the correct side upon which to pass street cars for safety reasons.
2. On three- or four-lane streets it permits horse-drawn vehicles or other slow-moving vehicles to pull to the right to permit street cars or other faster vehicles to pass.
3. It largely eliminates delays and decreases the hazard to moving traffic lanes, often including street cars, caused by vehicles "working their way" in or out of short parking spaces at the curb.
4. It is of great value to merchandise loading and unloading where this must be done on the street (it should be done off-street or in alleys as far as possible).
5. It largely eliminates double-line parking or loading and unloading from the second lane from the curb.
6. "No Parking" enables passenger vehicles, motor coaches and taxicabs to discharge passengers at the curb, thereby not holding up lanes which should be exclusively for moving traffic. It thereby eliminates for passengers the hazard and discomfort of alighting in the middle of the street.
7. Because of the above-mentioned factors it reduces congestion and enables a speeding-up of traffic movement, especially on the more narrow streets. Increase in speed of mass transportation units means improved service to the great majority of the public.
8. Because of the speeding-up of traffic and the easy accessibility of loading entrances, trucking and deliveries are considerably reduced in cost.
9. The elimination of parking is of tremendous value to the Fire Department, both in moving along the street and in fighting a fire at such a location.
10. It reduces the hazard created by pedestrians walking out from between stopped vehicles.
11. It facilitates street cleaning considerably and snow removal tremendously.
12. It greatly improves the effectiveness of display windows to people riding past in street cars, buses or as passengers in automobiles.
13. Parking elimination makes congested business districts more accessible to the considerable majority of people who use public vehicles (including street cars, buses and taxicabs) as compared to private automobiles. Business in general is benefited by the increased number of patrons who may conveniently enter and leave the district.
14. In important business districts it encourages the development of off-street parking facilities so that even customers coming in private automobiles will find shopping more convenient and less time-consuming than with street parking permitted. The elimination of "hurried shopping" by customers fearing the end of short-time parking limit is one of the benefits to merchants. These off-street parking facilities also make unnecessary the troublesome and time-consuming search for parking space by persons engaged in certain types of business which demand the use of automobiles intermittently during the business day. Off-street parking facilities also provide all-day, protected storage for those who still desire to use a private automobile in coming to the district.
15. "No Parking" reduces the number of stolen cars, a factor no longer unimportant. Even though in large proportion stolen cars are recovered, they have usually suffered damage.

The fourteenth benefit is that the elimination of parking "encourages the development of off-street parking facilities." This is all right, of course, but many traffic engineers take the position that the off-street facilities should come first. The man who spends a good part of his day driving through side streets looking for a place in which to leave his car isn't helped much by the knowledge that the development of garages and other off-street facilities is being encouraged. He can't park on encouragement and he can't keep driving around the block until a garage is built for him. He is likely to plead, if he doesn't protest, that the garage should be erected before he is forbidden to park on the main avenue.

TO BEAUTIFY HIGHWAYS.

THE Society for the Protection of New Hampshire Forests has announced a program of establishing a thousand forest reservations along the highways of New Hampshire, in a campaign to beautify the roadways of the State. According to a report of the society, twenty-two such tracts have already been acquired by gift or purchase, and the State has thirty-three more bordering the highways.

ASKS CURB ON "RACKET"

Insurance Company Urges Further Legislation Against Fraudulent Damage Suits

A RECOMMENDATION that more States be urged to take steps to end the "guest or gratuitous passenger racket" was made by James F. Land, chief counsel for the Republic Automobile Insurance Company, in a communication to the National Conference on Street and Highway Safety, which met in Washington last week.

Mr. Land stated that an investigation by his company had brought to light many cases of collusion between automobile owners and their guests to obtain money from insurance companies by false pretenses.

"We have discovered," he declared, "cases of record where accident reports have been colored and distorted, both by the driver, whose car carried public liability insurance, and by his guest passenger, in an effort to collect damages for the allegedly injured guest. In reality, the colored reports resulted from a carefully planned conspiracy, for the most part between drivers and guests who were related."

Another evil disclosed by the investigation, Mr. Land asserted, dealt with the so-called "shyster or ambulance-chasing attorneys," who pursue guest passengers injured in motor mishaps in an effort to have them bring suits for exaggerated damages.

Mr. Land pointed to seven States which have moved to eradicate the "racket" through legislation clarifying a driver's liability following accident. These are Connecticut, Iowa, Oregon, California, Delaware, Michigan and Vermont.

PEDESTRIANS AT LARGE

Not Easy to Control Unless Vehicles Are Regulated for Their Safety and Convenience

By BOCKWELL STEPHENS.

IF New York's present campaign to end jaywalking is successful, the city will become one of the few in the United States which have been able to achieve effective pedestrian control, according to a nation-wide survey just completed by the Albert Russel Erskine Bureau for Street Traffic Research.

Approximately 75 per cent of American cities of more than 50,000 population have enacted specific regulations requiring pedestrians to obey traffic signals, the survey revealed. Police traffic chiefs in more than 25 per cent of the cities surveyed state that these rules are not obeyed. In a majority of the remaining cities the regulations are not enforced.

Los Angeles, according to the survey, remains the outstanding example of effective pedestrian control, closely followed by Seattle, San Francisco and Long Beach, Cal. Several cities are contemplating pedestrian control plans but have not yet put them to the test. During the past year, it was found, no large city in the country has succeeded in establishing effective control.

Both Chicago and St. Louis experimented with jaywalking ordinances, and both repealed the regulation after a short trial. Smaller cities which have tried to control pedestrian movement include St. Petersburg, Fla., whose chief of police said, "This department has found that the cost of attempting to enforce pedestrian control is prohibitive," and Newport News, Va., which reported, "Ordinance not obeyed."

"All the police at a city's command cannot enforce pedestrian control," said Dr. Miller McClintock, director of the Erskine Bureau, which is endowed in Harvard University by the Studebaker Corporation. "Pedestrian control must be self-enforcing, and to become so it must win the voluntary support of the public without recourse to police power. The cities which have been most successful in this phase of traffic control have found that no police enforcement is necessary beyond that of the usual routine supervision.

"Any control plan must appeal to the public as being not only reasonable but a definite improvement over previous conditions. It is hardly reasonable to require pedestrians to sacrifice any of their legal right to use the streets at any time and at any place they desire without offering them direct and obvious compensation in greater safety and convenience.

"There are three essential requirements for effective pedestrian control. The first is a short signal interval. Pedestrian patience must never be tried by too long a wait between signals, nor by being forced to wait on the curb when no cross traffic is moving against them. Pedestrians will normally wait not much more than thirty seconds for the signal to change unless traffic is heavy and continuous, or at least sufficiently so to make crossing appear difficult.

"It is very improbable that New York will ever succeed in establishing effective pedestrian control with its present system of unreasonably long time intervals in its signal system. Pedestrians are forced to wait too long. Police may be able to control a few intersections, but no generally effective pedestrian control can be established, in all probability, unless conditions become more favorable for general cooperation by the public.

Getting Across.

"In the second place, reasonably adequate provision must be made for pedestrians to reach the sidewalk before cross traffic is started. When vehicles are released without adequate warning, pedestrians who have been conscientiously obeying the signals will be caught in mid-street. Naturally this leads to ultimate disregard of regulations which place restrictions on freedom of movement without offering an equivalent value in definite protection and convenience.

"Finally, there must be a thorough campaign to educate both the public and the police before pedestrian control is initiated. Both walkers and drivers must be informed of their relative rights and obligations, and the advantages of the new program emphasized until they are apparent to all classes of street users."

Pedestrian traffic flows much like water, following the line of least resistance, according to Dr. McClintock. He continued:

"If traffic signals are set against pedestrians and a break occurs in the line of vehicles, people will ignore both signals and police and dash across the street. Or, if it seems to them more convenient or quicker to cross in the middle of the block, jaywalking is almost inevitable.

"The principal reason for the success of pedestrian control in Los Angeles has been the short period timing of the signal system, which reduces waiting intervals to the most reasonable limits possible. The time cycle of the traffic lights is changed many times a day to conform to the actual requirements of traffic flow. Thus pedestrians are seldom forced to wait at the curb of an empty street."

Though pedestrian control is perhaps the most difficult task facing city traffic authorities, it is at the same time one of the most important phases of the traffic problem, Dr. McClintock believes. Pedestrians are the chief sufferers from accidents in the central business districts, and are also one of the most important sources of delay to moving traffic. Pedestrians who overflow the curbs at intersections may destroy as much as 50 per cent of the capacity of the street.

Thus far the pedestrian has been left largely to follow his own devices. Such regulations as have been enforced have been directed almost entirely at the driver. Slight attention has been given to the adjustment of conflicts between vehicles and foot traffic.

"The present haphazard relationship between street users grew up many centuries ago," Dr. McClintock pointed out. "It is based on the English common law rule that all users of the highway have an equal right to its use, subject only to care that in the exercise of this right they shall not unnecessarily jeopardize the safety of other users of the way.

"This rule was logical and reasonable enough until perhaps a quarter of a century ago, when the motor vehicle was introduced into the traffic pattern. Pedestrians and horse-drawn vehicles could use the same traffic area on the basis of mutual rights with comparative safety. But the speed and volume of present-day motor traffic have completely altered the case. New standards and new obligations must be established. Experience has shown that the adjustment can be made, but the task involves far more than just the passage of a new ordinance and the use of additional details of traffic police."

REPORTED ABOUT ROADS

WITH the frost now all out of the ground, general road conditions through New England are unusually good for so early in the season, the Socony Touring Service reports.

In Vermont, following the opening of the Burlington-Barre road and improvements of the Molly Stark Trail from Brattleboro, important improvements are being made on U. S. Routes 5 and 7, the main north and south routes.

With the present rebuilding, between Windsor and White River Junction, and between Wells River and Barnet, of the route along the Connecticut River, popular as a gateway highway to Quebec, better conditions are said to be obtainable at this time on the New Hampshire side. Montpelier-Rutland traffic may avoid construction on the direct route south from Montpelier by traveling the parallel road to Barre.

Of particular importance to motorists through the White Mountains in New Hampshire is the rebuilding of the Twin Mountain-Bethlehem road. A good detour has been posted. It is reported that through traffic from this region to Colebrook and Quebec moves faster over U. S. Route 3 via Lancaster, but the leisurely sightseer will find more of interest going via Berlin and Dixville Notch.

In Maine there is this year a choice of routes between Portland and Bangor. The more scenic of the two, U. S. 1 through Brunswick, will have several short stretches of reconstruction; the route via Lewiston, Augusta and Waterville offers a greater percentage of hard surface. The several routes radiating from Portland to the upper lake region are all reported free from detours or delays of any consequence.

In Southern New England States road improvements continue. The rebuilding of several roads in Connecticut and Massachusetts has resulted in the opening of a new route between Hartford and Worcester; this, in addition to being shorter, avoids the heavy intercity traffic of the Hartford-Springfield-Worcester route. This route is a combination of Connecticut 108 to Manchester, 107 through Tolland to Stafford Springs, 105 to the State line; Massachusetts 124 through Sturbridge and Charlton City to the junction with 12, which is followed to Worcester.

Paving of the Mohawk Trail between Greenfield and North Adams, completed last Fall, provides a popular route, especially as it now connects with the scenic Taconic Trail running west from Williamstown to Albany via Petersburg.

Widening of the Newburyport Turnpike, started last year and carried over the Winter, has been resumed, with at least two traffic lanes now open over the entire stretch. While a stretch of construction on Jacob's Ladder in the vicinity of Chester has not closed this route, through traffic may avoid it by using the Berkshire Trail between Pittsfield and Northampton.

Work continues on U. S. 6 between Danbury and Newtown, but it is causing practically no interference to through traffic. This route has further construction between North Woodbury and Watertown. Although the road is open, traffic may avoid it by following optional routes through the Litchfield Hills and Torrington or via Waterbury.

The new route from Boston through Woonsocket, R. I., Danielson, Willimantic, Middletown and New Haven is in good condition. Since the completion of several sections of this route last year it has become popular as the most direct route between Boston and New York.

Delaware Water Gap.

GRADING operations are about completed on the highway through Delaware Water Gap. Three of the four panels of concrete to be laid on the main street of the village are in place and "curing."

About one mile of concrete, one strip wide, has been laid from the village south, past the Kittatinny Hotel. The second panel is now ready for the concrete gang.

No pavement has been laid on the Portland end of the highway as yet.

The road through Water Gap is to be opened in July and, in the event that the entire highway is not completed by that time, traffic will be maintained over sections under one-way control.

New Brunswick All Open.

ALL motor highways in New Brunswick are now open to traffic, the Province's Bureau of Information and Tourist Travel reports. The last section to be opened was the stretch over the Jemseg Flats on Highway 9, which leads through Fredericton to Sussex and thence on to Moncton and points in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island.

Conditions in Quebec.

IN Quebec, roads are now in generally good shape, according to the latest bulletin issued by the Province's Roads Department, which lists conditions on the following officially numbered highways:

No. 1—Montreal-Sherbrooke-Thetford Mines-Quebec—242.85 miles. Good from Montreal to Magog. Passable from Magog to Sherbrooke. Passable from Sherbrooke to East Angus. Good from East Angus to Valley Junction. From Valley Junction follow Highway No. 23 as far as Scott. If it is desired to enter Quebec via the Lévis ferry, continue on Lévis-Jackman Highway. If it is desired to enter Quebec via the Quebec Bridge, take the Scott-Quebec Bridge connection passing by St. Etienne de Lauzon and St. Rédempteur to rejoin Highway No. 3 one mile west of the bridge. Good.

No. 2—Edmundson-Rivière du Loup-Quebec-Montreal-Toronto—424.53 miles. Good from Edmundston to Rivière du Loup. Good from Rivière du Loup to Quebec. Good from Quebec to Montreal. Good from Montreal to Coteau Landing. Passable from Coteau Landing to the Ontario border. Bridge under construction at Champlain. Detour shown on the road. Bridge under construction at L'Assomption. Slow down.

No. 3—Lévis-Fort Covington—265.11 miles. Good from Lévis to the limit between St. Nicolas and St. Antoine de Tilly. Passable to the eastern limit of the parish of Ste. Croix. Good to the western limit of the village of Ste. Croix. Passable to the western limit of the parish of Lotbinière. Good to Fort Covington.

No. 4—Montreal-Malone—70.67 miles. Good.

No. 5—Lévis-Sherbrooke via Richmond—139.62 miles. Follow Highway No. 3 from Lévis to the intersection of Highway No. 5, one mile west of the Quebec Bridge, or Highway No. 1 from Quebec to the same intersection passing by the Quebec Bridge. Good to Dosquet. Passable to Ste. Anastasie. Good to Kingsey Siding. Passable to Sherbrooke. Dangerous bridge three miles east of the village of Kingsey Falls. Drive carefully.

No. 6—The Gaspé Tour Road—553.20 miles. Passable between Ste. Flavie and Cap Chat. Good to St. Joachim de Tourelles. Passable to Gaspé. Good to Newport. Passable to Matapédia. Passable to Ste. Flavie.

No. 7—Montreal-St. Albans—55.20 miles from Montreal to the Vermont border. Follow Highway No. 9 as far as Laprairie and Highway No. 14 as far as St. Jean. Good.

No. 8—Montreal-Hull-Aylmer-Pembroke—230.22 miles. Good.

No. 9—Montreal-Rouse's Point via Napierville (King Edward Highway)—43.43 miles. Good.

No. 10—Rivière-du-Loup-Ste. Flavie—85.10 miles. Good.

No. 11—Montreal-Mont-Laurier-Maniwaki-Hull—289.29 miles. Good from Montreal to Ste. Rose. Viau bridge under reconstruction over Rivière des Prairies. Detour by the bridge between Cartierville and Laval-des-Rapides. Widening operations under way between Pont Viau and Ste. Rose. Good from Ste. Rose to Lac des Ecorces. Passable to Mont-Laurier. Good between Mont-Laurier and Hull, save ¼-mile passable in the township of Kensington, and ½-mile near Pickanock bridge, in the township of Wright.

No. 12—Rougemont-St. Hyacinthe-Drummondville-Trois-Rivières—93.05 miles. Good from Rougemont to St. Hyacinthe. Good from St. Hyacinthe to Drummondville. Good from Drummondville to Ste. Angèle, opposite Trois Rivières.

No. 13—Sherbrooke-Derby Line—33.87 miles. Passable. Resurfacing under way.

No. 14—Montreal-Rouse's Point via St. Jean—47.71 miles. Good.

Socony Schools Started.

THE Standard Oil Company of New York has established fifty-three schools for the instruction of its 11,000 gasoline station operators in the lubrication of automobiles. The service is to be called "certified lubrication" and may be obtained in New York and New England. The men are taught how to find the lubrication points of every make of car by a special chart of that particular model, prepared in cooperation with the manufacturer. They are supplied with the proper tools and equipment. It is a fifteen-weeks course and includes practical instruction on different cars, models and chassis. Schools have been started in cities in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Maine, Connecticut and New York.

TAX BASIS DETERMINED

Federal Bureau Includes Weight of Vehicle and Gas Consumption in Suggested Formula for Assessment

By WILLIAM ULLMAN.

A FLAT rate, plus a gasoline tax, plus an assessment based upon the gross weight of the vehicle is the United States Bureau of Standards' contribution to the long quest for an equitable and uniform method of taxing motor vehicles.

The first step was determining what it is about a motor vehicle that affects the highway. Weight was the characteristic that stood out among the many considered. At least, it obviously constituted the chief difference between various types of vehicles. That difference was the thing to be taxed.

In arriving at that conclusion a vast amount of data were considered. The premise, however, was simplicity itself. It was recognized that for vehicles of a certain weight, a road of a specific thickness is adequate. For vehicles of greater weight, the thickness of the highway must be increased. For example, for the passenger car, a road surface of, say, four inches thickness would be adequate; for heavier trucks, seven inches of surfacing might represent a minimum.

In such a case, after a certain point, the cost of the road very largely is attributable to the larger vehicles, the bureau's scientists decided. This being true, equitable taxation dictated that they pay a greater share of the cost.

The fundamental difference between various types of vehicles thus established, the problem of reducing the taxation method to a formula was begun. Here it was recognized that motor-vehicle taxation raises money for other than highway purposes. One such factor was the cost of registering all vehicles. In this respect, the lightest roadster and heaviest truck are somewhat alike. So for the actual registration—the issuance of a license—a flat rate as low as possible was decreed the most equitable. The bureau sets no figure for this in its formula, recognizing that the cost of administration of motor-vehicle departments varies greatly in different States.

The next factor in the formula was the varied use which the individual car made of the highway. Mileage traveled was the equitable means of measurement. Therefore, the bureau figured that taxation might well be based upon gasoline consumption, as it is already in all the forty-eight States.

There are certain qualifications or exceptions in the bureau's final formula. It was recognized, for example, that it makes a difference how the gross weight of a vehicle is distributed; that a six-wheel vehicle spreads its weight over a greater part of the highway, which permits of lighter construction than if the weight is divided between four points, or four wheels. Accordingly, the formula, to be equitable, provides for a distinction between varied types of equally heavy vehicles.

An economic point was considered with regard to the very heaviest of trucks. It was that, although relatively few in number and necessarily of the sturdiest kind of construction, these vehicles make a definite economic contribution to society. Failure to recognize this, it is pointed out, might result in virtually taxing them out of service by making them bear an unjust proportion of the taxation burden.

Under the formula, which may eventually be accepted for uniform adoption throughout the country, the passenger car owner is most likely to be affected by only the first two factors of the formula. He will pay a flat rate for registering his car, based upon administration cost of the Motor Vehicle Department. For his use of the highway he will pay a gasoline tax.

This, in the opinion of bureau officials, will apply to vehicles under 4,000 pounds in weight, which includes all but a small percentage of passenger cars.

The taxation formula is promulgated by the bureau, as are all of its scientific findings, merely as providing an equitable solution of the problem on a factual basis. There is nothing compulsory about its adoption, but any State which sees fit to make use of it is free to do so.

OLDSMOBILE OWNERS BUY VIKINGS WITH ABSOLUTE CONFIDENCE

The number of Vikings purchased by Oldsmobile owners is indicative of the confidence which Oldsmobile ownership inspires.

For Oldsmobile owners have learned to expect a great deal of a motor car—in performance, in comfort, in ease of handling, in dependability. They expect these things—plus the all-important factor of honest value. And they have found them, in generous measure, in the Viking 90-degree, V-type Eight.

For the Viking is a product of the same fine engineering and faithful manufacture which have made Oldsmobile so highly regarded everywhere. It offers features characteristic of cars much higher in price. Its roomy, comfortable Fisher Body is as smartly tailored as the most critical person could desire. Its 81-horsepower, 90-degree, V-type eight-cylinder engine assures performance of the finest character . . . with abundant power, speed and acceleration . . . with luxurious smoothness throughout the entire speed range.

And in addition to these things, the Viking Eight has proved its thorough dependability in every phase of motoring. This thorough dependability, which is the best guarantee of satisfaction you can find in a motor car, explains why Oldsmobile owners buy Vikings with absolute confidence.

STATE LINES LIMIT LAWS

Legal Operation of Automobile in One State Often Unlawful In Another—Minimum Age Requirements Vary

MOST holders of automobile insurance policies know that, when their automobiles are illegally operated, their insurance is not in effect, but what constitutes "illegal operation" may not be so clear in their minds. It is often a question which the courts are called upon to decide, and many an owner has been surprised to find the decision of the courts very disagreeable to him.

When an automobile is operated in obvious violation of the law, there is, of course, no question or doubt. Any owner knows, for instance, that his insurance company is not bound if he drives his car after his license to do so has been revoked. He may not be aware, however, that when legal operation of an automobile in one State is illegal in another, he can get into trouble by crossing a State line. This is especially true with respect to minimum age requirements.

"How many policy holders know that the standard automobile policies give no coverage while the automobile is being operated 'by any person under the age limit fixed by law, or, in any event, under the age of 14 years?'" asks H. D. Sammis in an article in a recent issue of "The Fireman's Fund Record." An insured person "may be familiar with the motor vehicle laws of his own State," Mr. Sammis continues, but may fail to realize that the laws of other States sometimes vary. He points out that, on long motor trips, relief driving is a common occurrence, and that a father is often relieved at the wheel by his son or daughter. "If an accident should occur in one of the States which prohibit that minor from driving, the assured would be without insurance protection."

For the benefit of policy holders, Mr. Sammis sums up the license and minimum age requirements of the various States, making a distinction, as most of the statutes do, between non-commercial operators and commercial chauffeurs. His summary follows:

	Minimum Age Limit Chauffeurs.	Minimum Age Limit Operators.
ALABAMA	18	16	Chauffeur's license required. Persons under these ages may drive if accompanied by an adult.
ARIZONA	18	18	Operator's and chauffeur's license required. Persons under 18 may obtain special permit to drive.
ARKANSAS	18	None	Chauffeur's license required. Chauffeurs in first and second class cities must be 21.
CALIFORNIA	18	14	Operator's and chauffeur's license required. Persons under 18 not to operate public automobiles or school buses.
COLORADO	15	15	Chauffeur's license required. Persons under 15 not to drive at all.
CONNECTICUT	16	16	Operator's and chauffeur's license required. Unlicensed persons over 16 may drive if accompanied by a licensed operator for a period not exceeding 30 days. No license issued to persons between 16 and 18 years until parent, parents or guardian has filed certificate requesting such license and proof of financial responsibility must be furnished commissioner. Drivers of public service motor vehicles must be 18 years old.
DELAWARE	16	16	Operator's and chauffeur's license required. Operators of passenger-carrying autos must be over 21. Unlicensed persons over 15 may operate outside limits of any city for 30 days if accompanied by licensed operator.
DIST. OF COLUMBIA	18	16	Operator's and chauffeur's license required. No person may operate a machine unless he has obtained an operator's permit or a temporary operator's permit. This temporary permit is good for ten days, then upon passing the examination given by the Police Department he may operate a car.
FLORIDA (owners)	18	16
(Others)	..	14	Chauffeur's license required. Persons under 14 may operate if accompanied by owner or licensed chauffeur.
GEORGIA	16	16	Chauffeur's license required. Owners must be over 16. Persons under 16 not to drive at all.
IDAHO	18	16	Chauffeur's license required. Persons under 16 not to drive at all.
ILLINOIS	18	15	Chauffeur's license required. Unlicensed persons may operate if accompanied by owner or licensed chauffeur.
INDIANA	18	17	Operator's and chauffeur's license required. Secretary of State may issue permit to persons over 14 years of age and less than 16 years for exclusive purpose of going to and from school. Not to be issued to residents of cities of the first or second class. Persons between 16 and 17 may obtain special permit to operate.
IOWA	21	15	Chauffeur's license required. Persons between 18 and 21 may secure chauffeur's license if consent of parents or guardian is given. Any person may operate if accompanied by an adult.
KANSAS	14	14	Persons under 14 not to drive at all.
KENTUCKY	16	16	Chauffeur's license required. Persons between 14 and 16 may operate if accompanied by owner or adult.
LOUISIANA	16	16	Chauffeur's license required. Ordinances of municipalities usually specify minimum age at 16 years. The statutes of Louisiana and Mississippi regulating motor vehicles do not specify a minimum age for chauffeurs and other drivers. The Louisiana statute specifically provides that it applies only in localities where it has not been amended by ordinances. The ordinances of the several municipalities specify 16 years as the minimum age of drivers.
MAINE	18	15	Operator's and chauffeur's license required. Unlicensed persons over 15 years may operate if accompanied by licensed operator.
MARYLAND	16	16	Operator's and chauffeur's license required. Persons under 16 not to drive at all.
MASSACHUSETTS	18	16	Operator's and chauffeur's license required. Persons under 16 not to drive at all. MASS. 68—Gardner to Templeton, 4½ miles, construction; open to one-way traffic. MASS. 109 — Northampton - Amherst, 3 miles, construction; open to one-way traffic. Completion expected July 15. MASS. 101—Providence, R. I., to MASS. 135 — Framingham to Taunton, 6 miles, open to one-way traffic. Wellesley, 4 miles, near Natick, construction. Completion expected July 26.
MICHIGAN	18	14	Operator's and chauffeur's license required. Persons under 14 not to drive at all.
MINNESOTA	No age limit		Chauffeur's license required. No persons shall operate or drive a motor vehicle on any highway in this State who is under 15 years of age unless such person is accompanied at the time by a duly licensed chauffeur, or by owner, or by a competent person over 15 years of age authorized by the owner of the motor vehicle being operated, provided that such owner must be 15 years of age or over. No person, whether licensed or not, who is an habitual user of narcotics or who is under the influence of intoxicating liquors or narcotics, shall drive any vehicle upon any highway.
MISSISSIPPI	16	..	Ordinances of municipalities usually specify minimum age at 16 years. The Mississippi statute is the so-called uniform motor vehicle act. In construing it, the Supreme Court of Mississippi held that it is subject to modification by ordinances. The several municipalities of Mississippi specify 16 years as the minimum age, excepting several of the smaller towns and Winter resorts, whose ordinances specify a minimum age of 14 years.
MISSOURI	18	16	Chauffeur's license required. Persons regularly operating auto of another person in the course of or as an incident to his employment must be over 18. Persons under 16 not to drive at all. Professional chauffeurs must have a license and the law provides that no license shall be granted to such a chauffeur unless he be at least 18 years of age.
MONTANA	None	None	Chauffeur's license required. No provision.
NEBRASKA	16	16	Persons under 16 not to drive at all.
NEVADA	15	15	Persons between 12 and 15 may drive if accompanied by adult operator if express permission of owner is obtained.
NEW HAMPSHIRE	18	16	Operator's and chauffeur's license required. Unlicensed persons over 16 may drive if accompanied by licensed operator. No person under 16 can be licensed as a motorcycle operator.
NEW JERSEY	17	17	Operator's and chauffeur's license required. Persons under 17 not to drive at all, and learners over 17 must get permit.
NEW MEXICO	14	14	Operator's license required. Persons under 14 may be licensed after examination.
NEW YORK	18	18	Operator's and chauffeur's license required. Persons under 16 not to drive at all, and learners over 18 may operate if accompanied by licensed operator. Junior licenses issued to persons between 16 and 18 in rural communities.
NORTH CAROLINA	16	16	Persons under 16 not to drive at all.
NORTH DAKOTA	None	None	No provision.
OHIO	16	None	Chauffeur's license required. Chauffeurs for motor transportation companies must be 21 years of age and must secure special license.
OKLAHOMA	None	None	No provision.
OREGON	18	16	Operator's and chauffeur's license required. Persons under 16 not to drive at all. Persons between 14 and 16 may get permit to operate only as a means of getting to and from school. Learners over 16 must get permit.
PENNSYLVANIA	16	16	Operator's and chauffeur's license required. Persons under 16 not to drive at all. Learners over 16 must get permit and be accompanied by licensed operator. It is unlawful to employ a person under 18 years of age to operate a vehicle for pay. This means truck drivers and chauffeurs. Also, no person under the age of 21 years can operate a motor bus or a motor omnibus.
RHODE ISLAND	16	16	Operator's and chauffeur's license required. Persons under 16 not to drive at all.
SOUTH CAROLINA	18	12	Operators of public automobiles coming under jurisdiction of Highway Commission must be 18 or over.
SOUTH DAKOTA	15	15	Persons under 15 may drive if accompanied by owner.
TENNESSEE	None	None	No provision.
TEXAS	18	None	Chauffeur's license required.
UTAH	18	16	Chauffeur's license required. Persons under 16 not to drive at all.
VERMONT	18	18	Operator's and chauffeur's license required. Owners between 16 and 18 may drive as chauffeurs if they have operator's license. Persons over 14 may drive if accompanied by licensed operator or chauffeur.
VIRGINIA	None	None	Chauffeur's license required. State law makes no requirement of minimum age. This matter is left entirely to the locality.
WASHINGTON	21	15	Operator's and chauffeur's license required. Persons under 18 not to drive trucks of four tons or more load capacity. Persons under 21 may get permit to drive as chauffeur. Persons under 15 may get permit to drive for purpose of attending school. Persons under 15 may drive if accompanied by parent or guardian.
WEST VIRGINIA	14	14	Operator's and chauffeur's license required. Persons under 14 may drive if accompanied by parent or owner. Persons over 14 may drive for three month for instruction if accompanied by licensed operators.
WISCONSIN	16	16	Operator's and chauffeur's license required. Persons under 16 may drive if accompanied by an adult. Operators are also required to have a license.
WYOMING		15	Persons under 15 not to drive at all.

"To illustrate the importance of this matter," Mr. Sammis adds, "it will be of interest to know that the United States Supreme Court now has under review the case of Guenther vs. United States Fidelity and Guaranty. Plaintiff carried a liability policy of the defendant. This car, while being operated by a minor, 17 years old, struck and injured a person, who sued the plaintiff. The company refused to defend the suit and judgment for $3,890 was rendered. It was contended by the company that the policy provided that it should not be liable for accidents while the automobile was being operated by a person under the age fixed by law * * * and that under the Lakewood (Ohio) ordinance it was unlawful for any one under the age of 18 to operate a motor vehicle. The Circuit Court of Appeals held that the term 'fixed by law' in the policy did not cover municipal ordinances, and hence the insurance company was liable. An appeal was taken to our highest court, which has agreed to a review."

Licenses Required.

In addition to the facts about minimum age requirements, it is interesting to learn from Mr. Sammis's summary the regulations of the various States with respect to the licensing of automobile operators and chauffeurs. An examination of his notes reveals that twenty States and the District of Columbia require licenses from both operators and chauffeurs and that seventeen require only chauffeurs to be licensed, and that in eleven States it is not necessary to have any license to drive a motor vehicle.

The States which require both operators and chauffeurs to be licensed, according to Mr. Sammis's information, are as follows:

Arizona, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Indiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, Washington, West Virginia and Wisconsin, also the District of Columbia.

The States which require licenses from chauffeurs only are:

Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Iowa, Kentucky, Louisiana, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Ohio, Texas, Utah and Virginia.

The States which do not require licenses from either operators or chauffeurs are:

Kansas, Mississippi, Nebraska, Nevada, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee and Wyoming.

NEWS FROM DETROIT

By FRED KINGSBURY.

DETROIT.

TALK in Detroit at the present time is centring around the new models which will be announced during the coming Summer months. Nearly all the cars to be offered will be in the straight-eight class. At least six of them are coming before Oct. 1, along with a new sixteen-cylinder model. The last-named car, however, will not be a Michigan product.

Then, too, other changes are coming, but most of them will be later in the year, probably around the time of the New York automobile show in January, which is the customary time at which to announce the new offerings.

The morale of the automobile men in this section of the country is excellent. In the past few days optimism has been growing by leaps and bounds, and heads of several plants feel certain that this attitude will be reflected in the stock market in the very near future. The feeling in Detroit is that buying at retail is about to start in all sections of the country on a much larger scale than has been prevalent at any time this year.

However, motor car manufacturing plants are keeping production down to actual orders from dealers. Stocks of cars are very low all over the country. Factory inventories are also low, and no large-scale purchases of materials are being made. Motor car makers say that production will be kept down to the point of actual orders during the balance of the year.

Reports received during the past two days indicate that used car stocks are down, especially in the large cities, and no attempt is being made to build them up. Used car stocks in this city are not excessive and most of this class of merchandise is very good.

It transpired a short time ago that the majority of factories deserve credit for the assistance that they have been giving dealers during the year in moving their used cars. Every plant has a large used car department which is functioning 100 per cent in lending every aid possible to sales of these units.

Reports received from every State in the Union, with the exception of two in the Southeast and the same number in the Southwest, are to the effect that used cars are not a drug on the market.

IN THE FOREIGN FIELD

PERHAPS influenced by editorials in many leading German papers demanding to know what good reason there was for the announced intention of the leaders of the German automobile industry not to hold any big show until 1931, the National Association of the Automobile Industry of Germany apparently has changed its mind, as it is reported that a ten-day international automobile and motorcycle exposition will open in Berlin on Nov. 6 this year. Plenty of space for exhibitors is said to be assured through the construction of several up-to-date garages at the exposition grounds.

Touring in Switzerland.

THE rapid growth of touring by automobile in Europe during the last few years is illustrated by a report from Switzerland found in the Frankfurter Zeitung putting the number of persons entering that famous resort country in 131,000 automobiles last year at 420,000 and their expenditures while there at $25,000,000. In 1928 the number of cars entering the Swiss Confederation was 103,630 and in 1923 it was only 10,000. Last year about 16 per cent of the foreign visitors arrived in automobiles, and when the domestic motor-car users are included it is estimated that at least 30 per cent of the year's traveling was done on pneumatic tires. The number of passenger cars owned in Switzerland at the beginning of 1930 was 57,256, the number of trucks and tractors, 13,916, and of motorcycles, 45,248. The number of inhabitants per motor vehicle on Jan. 1 last was 33.3, against 36.9 on Jan. 1, 1929. All of which seems to show that mountains can't stop the development of the motor-car industry.

Motors in Turkey.

Only 582 automobiles in Constantinople are privately owned, according to statistics just published. This is a very low figure for a population of 800,000. There are 1,119 taxis and 69 government cars in operation out of a grand total of 1,770 machines in the city. In addition to this number, there are 374 motor trucks and buses.

After conducting various investigations in Europe the Ministry of Public Works has adopted the following policy for highway constructions: To build only substantial roads, to keep them in continual repair, to employ as much as possible materials in the country and to build roads in accord with the most immediate needs of the people. While bitumen is preferred as surfacing material, it would be necessary to import this and the country's financial condition does not encourage such procedure. For this reason, tar is considered more advisable. This has already been used in the vicinity of Angora, and the gas company there is prepared to furnish the necessary material for surfacing. However, the prices of this material have been found higher than in France, and also higher than imported bitumen.

New Palatial Yacht Launched at Bath—Boating Film Available—Other News

AMONG the luxurious yachts recently completed is Logan G. Thompson's new 191-foot twin-screw Diesel, which has been built at a cost of $750,000 and launched from the shipyard of the Bath Iron Works, Bath, Me. It was christened the Sylvia by Mrs. Erle G. Meeks of Connersville, Ind., sister of Mrs. Thompson.

The yacht is of clipper stem design and was planned by Henry J. Gielow, Inc., naval architects of New York City. Its length is 154 feet, and it has a beam of 26 feet 6 inches and a draft of 10 feet. The two Diesel engines are of 425 horsepower each. The yacht is expected to develop a cruising speed of fifteen miles and a high speed of seventeen miles per hour. Her cruising range is 6,500 miles. Captain Roy A. Ranger will be in command.

Canada, Japan, Sweden, Netherlands, the United Kingdom and Finland were the largest purchasers of marine equipment for the month of March, according to the Department of Commerce. The Japanese imported a great number of Diesel engines and Finland bought 138 outboard engines during the month. Sweden bought 253 outboard motors and Canada purchased American-built marine engines.

On the seventh day after leaving the plant at North Tonawanda, eleven new Richardson cruisabouts, skippered by their owners, arrived at the Colonial Yacht Club in New York City. All eleven of the cruisabouts were sold by Bruns Kimball & Co. A reception committee, headed by Commodore Lobenthal and Captain McDonald, went up the river to meet the fleet and escort it down to the club.

An old two-cylinder marine motor, built thirty-two years ago in a little shop in Chicago, will be shipped to the Museum of Science and Industry of Chicago to take its place as an example of early engineering enterprise. The antique power unit, weighing 1,200 pounds and developing eight horsepower, was built by E. H. Fahrney, now president of the Universal Motor Company of Oshkosh, Wis.

The Hacker Boat Company is building a speed yacht at its factory, at Mount Clemens, Mich., for the King of Siam. It is to be 38 feet long, with a twelve-cylinder Packard marine motor of 850 horsepower, capable of a speed of fifty-five miles an hour.

DIESEL ELECTRIC BUS SUCCESSFUL IN TRIAL

A DIESEL-ELECTRIC bus owned by the Public Service Corporation of New Jersey completed last Sunday a trip from Newark to French Lick, Ind., a distance of 900 miles, in four days, it is announced.

The engine, using fuel oil instead of gasoline, is a six-cylinder Mercedes-Benz Diesel type with a rating of 75 horsepower. It is started from cold with an electric motor after heating "glow-plugs" in the precombustion chambers for about thirty seconds. The engine is controlled by a conventional foot accelerator pedal, which regulates the quantity of fuel injected into the cylinders.

The bus was on exhibition at the silver anniversary meeting of the Society of Automotive Engineers at French Lick last week.

CHRYSLER "77"

PRICES Smashed

$200 to $350

This tremendous slash in current Chrysler "77" prices is occasioned by the fact that sometime in midsummer Chrysler will introduce a new model to take the place of the present Chrysler "77".

Other Chrysler models, "70", "66" and Chrysler Six, are being continued unchanged.

Meanwhile the supply of Chrysler "77" models is rapidly melting away at $200 to $350 off regular prices. An opportunity like this won't last long. Bring in your present car for appraisal. Liberal financing facilities are available.

SECRECY GUARDS NEW SETS

Usual Advance Information on What Will Be New in Radio Is Missing on Eve of Trade Show

By ORRIN E. DUNLAP, Jr.

NO radio trade show on the eve of its opening was ever shrouded in as much secrecy as the sixth annual exposition which begins tomorrow morning in the Civic Auditorium at Atlantic City.

Heretofore, the manufacturers have released advance information relative to their new instruments. This year most of them are cautious. They have adopted a more or less mysterious attitude. It seems that each one wants to see what the other will offer before he shows his new set. Tomorrow will tell the story.

"Two important events are being held this week," said H. B. Richmond, president of the Radio Manufacturers Association. "They are our trade show and the annual convention. Two distinct purposes will be covered. The trade show makes it possible for jobbers and dealers to obtain a cross-section of the industry. They can determine how their lines compare with those of their competitors. This cross-section view stimulates the manufacturer to deliver his very best, in order that his product may compare favorably with that of his competitor."

Silence on the part of several large manufacturers has stirred up curiosity and speculation as to what they may offer that is new. All seem to be wondering, how many, if any, will introduce a receiver equipped with the pent[illegible] tube, which is called "a glorified [illegible]en-grid."

New Tubes on Display.

One thing is certain, three new battery operated tubes and a new set using them will be exhibited for the first time. The rush to meet the demand for the all-electric set several years ago caused the manufacturers to neglect the direct current or battery market. The new bulbs are expected to be a great boon to radio reception on the farm and in sections where alternating current is not available. In fact, these new amplifiers and detectors are heralded as "the biggest development in Radiotrons since the alternating current tubes that made radio all-electric."

These tubes require only two volts of "A" battery to operate the filament and a maximum of 90 volts "B" battery. They are said to be the most efficient and most economical battery operated bulbs ever developed. One is a general purpose tube, that is, it can be used as a detector or amplifier. It can be employed in place of a 199 tube. One is a screen-grid for use as a radio frequency amplifier. It cannot be substituted for a 199, but can be used in place of a 222 screen-grid bulb. The third tube is for the last socket or power output. It replaces the 120 tube and calls for 135 volts "B" battery, and 22.5 volt "C." Any set now using 199 tubes can be greatly modernized by these new bulbs.

The screen-grid tube which many frowned upon at the Chicago show a year ago has proved itself since then and will be in general use as a radio frequency amplifier in most of the 1930-31 models. Many thought the screen-grid was new last year. However, in the laboratory collection of old tubes of the General Electric Company at Schenectady there is a screen-grid bulb labeled "1923." The research laboratories are from five to eight years ahead of the manufacturers who build for commercial use. The research workers look ahead to foresee what the set builders will need in years to come.

Tone Is Stressed.

The main point to be stressed in the new sets is superior tone. A number of the machines will have a knob on the panel by which the tone can be varied from bass to treble to suit a variety of ears. Those who prefer the low notes of the kettle drums can adjust the circuit to favor them. Others who prefer the high pitch of the violin can turn the knob toward treble. General Motors has announced a tone control such as this and also Philco. A representative of the latter describes the tone control as "a new device hailed as radio's newest miracle, giving the set owner personal control of station tone." Philco is going into the radio tube business, too.

Automatic volume control is another feature of several sets. Its function is to assist in minimizing the effect of fading. It is designed to equalize the volume of strong and weak signals to the sound level to which the volume control is adjusted. It prevents blasting when the circuit is tuned to a strong local station.

The console cabinet with dynamic loud-speaker is the dominating factor this season. Several of the large manufacturers have abandoned the table-model receiver. More of them are including the phonograph in combination with the radio set.

Last year it was discovered that the screen-grid bulbs were so powerful that some of the circuits could not efficiently handle the power and caused broad tuning or cross-talk. Input filters are used in some of the latest models, between the antenna and first radio frequency tube, to make the set tune sharply.

No radical or revolutionary changes are expected. However, mechanical and electrical refinements are anticipated. They will make the radio sets of 1930-31 finer instruments, enhanced chiefly in tone quality and in sharpness of tuning.

Optimistic on the Future.

The manufacturers seem to be optimistic on the sale prospects. They contend that the new sets will be so attractive that replacements of old sets will be encouraged. Furthermore, after the slump last November, many held on to the old sets, and that is why sales in the fourth quarter sagged far below normal levels. They expect, therefore, with the return of confidence in the general business conditions, that the public will forsake the old receivers and buy 1930-31 models. However, on the other hand, if business conditions do not improve in the third and fourth quarter, 1930 is likely to be a lean year for the radio industry.

Today, in radio circles, optimists far outnumber pessimists. They feel that the worst is over, that the industry has met a severe test and the fittest have survived to forge ahead and to achieve new wonders in radio. This week will tell part of the story, because conditions in the industry will be gone over very thoroughly in the meetings to be held by the Radio Manufacturers Association at the seashore.

EQUALITY IN POLITICS

Couzens Bill Provides That Candidates for Office Be Given Equal Chance on Radio

POLITICAL candidates in 1932 will be assured an equal opportunity of using radio broadcasting facilities to reach the public. The provision of the Couzens bill respecting this use has been given the approval of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce in executive session, and there is every indication it will be included in the amended radio law.

The section of the bill is so broad that it provides equal opportunity for use of radio to persons representing different views on all public questions.

Recently an association of citizens in the national capital was unable to broadcast its views in opposition to District suffrage over Station WMAL while the proponents used the radio equipment frequently. Upon complaining to the Radio Commission, delegates of the association were told that the present law does not compel a licensee to open his station to both sides of a public issue.

The Couzens bill makes it clear that "no obligation is imposed upon any licensee to allow the use of his station by or in the interest or support of any candidate for public office." But should he permit one candidate to speak from his studio, he is compelled to afford "equal opportunities to all other candidates for that office."

The station owner shall have no "power of censorship over the material broadcast" in these political radio addresses, and the rates charged for the time shall "not exceed the regular rates charged to advertisers."

LISTENING IN

NEARING completion in Dr. E. F. W. Alexanderson's laboratory at Schenectady is a television machine painted battleship gray.

"What is this machine for?" some-one asked.

"It is going to New York," a research worker replied.

When asked if it was for installation in the Palace Theatre he smiled and said he did not know.

Floyd Gibbons is reported to be making $2,250 per week for his prohibition poll broadcasts. He is on the air twice a night for that price. One talk goes over an Eastern network and later in the evening he speaks again on a Western hook-up. So great has been the response to his talks that the sponsors are said to be planning a transcontinental tour featuring this veteran war correspondent. If plans materialize he will travel in a special Pullman so arranged that the public will be able to see him in action at the microphone along the route.

A House of Magic.

Radio engineers at the General Electric laboratory in Schenectady see vast possibilities in the radio or electron tube, as it is called. Man, they say becomes tired by using his hands and eyes too much. They plan to make the vacuum tube work. For example, they can use a film and tubes associated with it to read out loud so man will not have to pick up a book and use his eyes. More than 140 pages can be recorded on one small reel of film.

They have one laboratory door securely bolted, but those who know how to wave the hands a certain way in front of the door actuate an electron tube and the door flies open. Keys will not be needed for doors in the future, they say. But those who forget the combination of hand gestures will be locked out.

They have a telephone transmitter just inside this magic door. A sign on it invites those who enter to "Say, hello." That operates a new type of tube which flashes causing a phonograph to play. This "House of Magic" is an uncanny place.

When will television be ready for the home? That is the question many are asking since Dr. E. F. W. Alexanderson showed his new bag of radio vision tricks on the screen in Proctor's Theatre at Schenectady.

No one can better answer that question than Dr. Alexanderson.

"It all depends on the public," he said. "We wonder if they want television. When we are sure they do I think we can give it to them. I have a television set in my home now."

What will the home-television machine cost? he was asked.

"That, of course, will depend upon mass production," he replied.

The Sharkey-Schmeling bout will probably be on the air June 12. Radio listeners are hopeful at least. No definite announcement has been made, however, and it may be withheld until just before the battle so that the box office will feel no ill effects. Both networks hope to have their microphones at the arena, which means that New Yorkers will hear the ringside description through WABC, WEAF or WJZ, William Carey, promoter, says the National Broadcasting Company has signed an exclusive contract.

The radio manufacturers and retailers hope that this bout will go on the air. Few if any events stimulate radio sales as much as a prizefight. Most radio programs are too rehearsed, according to listeners, and that is one reason why broadcasts, such as the Kentucky Derby and a prizefight, attract a large audience. No one is exactly sure who will win.

Handwriting on the Wall.

Those who saw the television images on the theatre screen at Schenectady saw handwriting on the wall for sound broadcasting. Broadcasting as it is known today will quickly vanish some day by a television eclipse. A good parallel is found in the way the silent picture gave way to the talkie.

Listeners have complained in such force against the removal of Ludwig Laurier's slumber music from WJZ that it has been decided to reinstate the hour in about a week.

This is a typical letter from a set owner: "Radio listeners who are lovers of good music are wondering why they have been deprived of Ludwig Laurier's delightful Slumber Hour which was suppressed without a word of explanation about a month ago. An extremely mediocre program under another director and masquerading under the old name has been put on as a substitute, but hearing it once is sufficient.

"There were hundreds of listeners who considered the original Slumber Hour the best program on the air and we definitely want to have it reinstated. Is it not extraordinary that this perfect program of purely orchestral music which has no counterpart on the air should be taken away and in its stead be offered just another of the commonplace concoctions with which radio is already swamped?

"The Sunday Times radio section published a very interesting article on Oct. 13, 1929, about Mr. Laurier and his famous Slumber Hour, which said that thousands of dollars had been offered by would-be sponsors for the use of the hour as an advertising medium, but that there was an established tradition around studio headquarters that this program belonged to the listeners and was not to be tampered with. Well, it has been sadly tampered with and we want it back."

Radio Commissioner Lafount of Utah keeps hammering away on the theory that the only way to improve radio reception in the United States is to eliminate a number of stations.

"This is very sound, but will never prevail as long as there are Senators and Congressmen at the capital to which these stations may appeal," said an observer in Washington. "Let the commission try to cancel the licenses of any stations, however small and useless they may be, and see what happens."

It is the belief of the broadcasters that listening to the radio in the city does not now fall off more than 15 or 20 per cent during the Summer. Improved radio sets, greater power of broadcasting stations and the use of second sets in Summer homes make the Summer audience potentially as large as that of other seasons, they argue.

By way of catching the Summer tourists and more fully covering vacation and camping territory, the Columbia System, in addition to WPG at Atlantic City, has recently added WLBZ at Bangor, Me., and WBCM, Bay City, Mich.

Talking Across the Sea.

With bargain rates in effect, one may now talk from Washington to London by radiophone for only about $30, Paris $34, or Berlin $35. Three years ago when the service began, the London rate was $75 for three minutes.

Blanks on which all radio sets in South Carolina are to be reported to the State Tax Commission have been sent to several thousand radio owners. The tax is guaduated according to the value of the set and the rates are as follows: 50 cents for sets costing less than $50; $1 for sets between $50 and $200; $2 for sets between $200 and $500; and $2.50 for sets costing more than $500.

The city of Auburn, N. Y., has applied to the Federal Radio Commission for a permit to erect a radio police station for use in preventing riots and escapes at the New York State prison. The penitentiary has been the scene of several revolts within the last few years. With police squad cars equipped with radio receiving sets and a transmitting station of about 35 or 40 watts at headquarters, an attempted escape could quickly be frustrated, according to Chester J. Bills, Auburn Police Chief.

How those who are building beautiful homes may avoid marring them with an unsightly antenna was explained to the Washington Chapter of the American Institute of Architects by E. J. Quinby of the Radio Corporation. Instead of stringing wires on the roof, the antenna is erected 100 yards or so from the house, out of sight, and connected with the radio set in the house by means of running a wire underground through a conduit.

In connection with apartment house antenna, Mr. Quinby showed the architects a photograph of the roof of an apartment building, old style, where there was a "forest" of wires for forty receiving sets strung haphazard and forming a fire and live wire hazard. Then he exhibited a picture of the roof of a modern apartment where but a single wire served as the antenna for the sets in eighty apartments.

RELIGIOUS BROADCASTS FOR SUMMER LISTENERS

A SUMMER series of religious programs will be inaugurated by the National Broadcasting Company this afternoon to continue until Oct. 12. The three presentations to be broadcast weekly are the Friendly Hour, conducted by Dr. J. Stanley Durkee; the National Sunday Forum, presenting Dr. Ralph W. Sockman and Twilight Reveries, conducted by Dr. Charles L. Goodell. These programs are sponsored by the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.

The Friendly Hour consists of music and a twenty-minute talk by Dr. Durkee. It will be broadcast over WJZ's network at 4 o'clock every Sunday afternoon. Dr. Sockman will be the speaker and the Oratorio Choristers will sing during the hour sponsored by the National Sunday Forum, to be presented through WEAF's chain at 5 o'clock on Sunday. Twilight Reveries will be heard over the WJZ system every Sunday at 5 o'clock.

These three religious broadcasts replace the programs offered throughout the Winter and Spring by Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick and Dr. Daniel A. Poling. It is expected that these preachers will resume their ethereal activities in the Fall.

The first American production of a drama which Theodore Dreiser wrote especially for the radio will be presented at 10 o'clock Wednesday morning over WABC's network. "The Blue Flame" is its title and it is founded on one of Mr. Dreiser's recent short stories.

Ten Outstanding Events This Week

June 1-7.

(Time Is P. M., Eastern Daylight Saving, Unless Otherwise Indicated)

TODAY

9:15—Orchestral Concert; Lewis James, Tenor—WEAF's Network.

MONDAY

9:30—Concert Orchestra; Male Trio—WEAF's Network.

TUESDAY

8:30—String Ensemble; Michael Rosenker, Violinist—WJZ's Network.

WEDNESDAY

9:45 A. M.—Description of British Derby at Epsom Downs—WABC's Network.

9:30—Orchestral Concert; Helen Kane, songs; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone; Willard Robison, songs; "Doc" Rockwell—WJZ's network.

THURSDAY

11:45 A. M.—Graduation Exercises United States Naval Academy at Annapolis. Address by Secretary of the Navy Charles Francis Adams—WABC's Network.

8:00—Vallee Orchestra; Frances Williams, Songs—WEAF's Network.

10:00—Symphony Orchestra; Mischa Elman, Violinist—WEAF's Network.

FRIDAY

8:00—Orchestral Concert; Jessica Dragonette; Cavaliers Quartet—WEAF's Network.

10:00—Concert Orchestra; Mario Chamlee, Tenor—WABC's Network.

MICROPHONE IS STILL KING

Despite Television Triumphs, Broadcasters Do Not Expect to Supplement Sound Programs for Images Just Yet

INSPIRED by John Hays Hammond's television eye that enables airplanes to "see" through fog, and by the images with which Dr. E. F. W. Alexanderson recently thrilled a theatre audience in Schenectady many have asked during the last week, when will television sets be ready for the home?

One listener-in who foresees the day when he will be a looker-in wrote: "Our radio set was built in 1925. It is high time that it be replaced by a new set which we had planned to acquire after seeing the new models to be introduced in June. But now we are up in the air. We read of television images entertaining on a theatre screen in Schenectady, and the prediction that thousands of playhouses will probably book television acts. Now, the question is, should we cling to the old faithful six-tube outfit and wait for television, or go ahead and buy a receiver that is improved in tone more than our 1925 product? Why should we get a new set now and have a television set make it obsolete in September?"

The problem this man faces is apparently one that many are striving to solve.

It is true that television in the home is inevitable. Dr. Alexanderson admits that probably every large theatre in the country will be equipped to give a television act. He predicts a wave of amateur television activity among the 100,000 experimenters in America. That is the way broadcasting began. The amateurs built the first receivers. Broadcasting caught the public imagination and the factories rushed to meet the demand for sets. But before there could be an incentive to build sets there had to be broadcast transmitters. It is believed that broadcasting of sound and broadcasting of sight will follow parallels in development.

Therefore, the first essential is television transmitters, to create a demand for television receivers. A receiver no matter how good would be of no avail if no images were in the air on regular schedule as are the broadcast programs. When broadcasting began the demand for receivers was spotty. In the Pittsburgh area KDKA, the pioneer, created a demand. There was no demand in New York. Then WJZ opened up at Newark, N. J., in 1921 and thousands rushed to build or buy radio receiving sets. And so it will be with television.

He Who Hesitates Is Lost.

Generally speaking five years is placed as the time when television will be in the home. But, when some one suggested five years to Dr. Alexanderson last week he answered: "Well, I don't know. What we wonder is if the public really wants television."

An engineer standing near Dr. Alexanderson said, "Any one who has television within grasp today, but waits for five years to market it, will lose out. Science moves too rapidly. Some one else more alert will get the jump on the one who tarries for another five years. The public is anxious for television today. The enthusiasm of the theatre audience in applauding the images proved that to be true. The radio research men believe that nothing can stop television from being a great home entertainer. Its destiny will lead it to the firesides of America long before 1935, if the images on the theatre screen are any indication of what can be done today."

It seems safe to say, considering the numerous problems involved, but based on the clarity of the Schenectady performance, that a year from this Autumn, that is, at the Radio World's Fair in 1931, television may begin to get into its stride. It may be delayed until 1932. But one thing is certain: it will cause an upheaval in broadcasting if the general public take to it as did the theatre audience in the Mohawk Valley. In the meantime, more theatres will book radio vision acts to help the box office and to show the public what the images can do on a screen. New apparatus costing millions of dollars will be required. Radio stars today will fade, because they must give way, unless they have television personalities. Microphone technique will not suffice. They must have the art of entertaining face to face. It will mean that much today in broadcasting will be scrapped and what is left will be the firm foundation upon which a new show, bigger and grander than ever, will be built. Broadcasting had to seek an audience. The television audience is already seated in millions of homes waiting for the curtain to go up. But when will the performance begin?

Broadcasters Lead Way.

The answer is: it will begin when television transmitters are installed by regular broadcasters. When the National Broadcasting Company and the Columbia System announce that they are building television transmitters, then one can feel that the day is not far distant when the demand will be created for receivers. But, until there is some assurance that television is here to stay as a regular show, there is no need to hesitate in the purchase of a new radio set.

A radio broadcast receiver purchased this Summer will no doubt well repay as an investment. It will give thousands of hours of entertainment before television is ready for the home. And, even if television sets were offered for sale next year there would be many who would stick with the broadcast receivers, waiting for several years for radio vision sets to become perfected. They will expect rapid changes in the designs during the first few years and will not invest until they are sure of the clarity,

A broadcast receiver of the 1930-31 style ought to serve at least five years, whether television comes or not. Furthermore, if radio advances in the next five years as it has in the past the 1935 owner of a 1930 set may be ready to replace it with a new set. There should be no hesitancy today in casting aside the 1925 receiver for a 1930 model, as far as television is concerned. There is a possibility that at first ordinary broadcast receivers will be used in conjunction with the image machines, to pick up the sound parts of the television show.

The broadcasters are not planning to stop the sound broadcasts, nor do they see the year ahead when they will stop. The show will go on. Those who wait are like the man who today gives up going to the movies because he is waiting for television in the theatre. He will miss many a fine performance.

TUBES BY THE MILLION

Market Expands With Advent of Automobile Radio—New Tubes for Farm Receivers

INCREASING stability and continued expansion in the broadcast receiving field augurs the best year yet for the tube manufacturers, according to Meade Brunet, sales manager of the Radiotron Company, Inc. He sees the new automobile radio as supplying an important stimulus to production and sale of tubes. It is estimated that 125,000,000 vacuum tubes will be sold this year.

"This season will mark the opening of a vast potential market in the sale of the automobile radio, the development of which as yet cannot be fully appreciated until we realize that there are approximately 23,000,000 passenger automobiles, or one for every five persons in the United States," he said.

"The potential market for the automobile radio sets is not confined to those passenger cars which are now in the hands of the user, but an increasing percentage of the new cars to be sold this year will be equipped with radio either by the factory or by the dealers' service stations. The vacuum tubes used for initial equipment in this field should reach tremendous value, and in addition it opens up a market that will considerably increase the renewal market."

Manufacturers are awakening to an uncultivated radio field in providing better battery radio for farmers, contends Mr. Brunet. This has been stimulated by the development of more efficient tubes operating on low voltages. These tubes are expected to aid the growth of the portable radio set. The renewal market is greater than ever before, with about 9,000,000 radio sets in the country.

THE MICROPHONE WILL PRESENT—

Graduation Exercises at Naval Academy and Description of English Derby Among Week's Events

HARRIET WARE, composer and pianist, will serve as accompanist when a program of her own compositions is heard over WEAF's chain at 2 o'clock this afternoon. Erva Giles, soprano; Robert Simmons, tenor and Arcadie Birkenholz unite in the presentation of this program:

Lilacs, To My Mother, tenor solos, Robert Simmons; Nocturne, White Moth Ballet, violin solos, Arcadie Birkenholz; Iris, By the Fountain, Sunlight Waltz, soprano solos, Erva Giles; The Friend of You, The Artisan, tenor solos, Robert Simmons; The Last Dance, soprano solo, Erva Giles.

With Lewis James as tenor soloist, an orchestra under Josef Pasternack presents six compositions by Rudolf Friml during the broadcast over WEAF's chain tonight at 9:15 o'clock:

Excerpts from "The Firefly," orchestra, with interludes by Mr. James; Only a Rose from "The Vagabond King," Mr. James, with orchestra; excerpts from "High Jinks," orchestra; Give Me One Hour from "The White Eagle," Mr. James, with Orchestra; March of the Musketeers from "The Three Musketeers," orchestra; excerpts from "Katinka," orchestra, with interludes by Mr. James.

"Trial by Jury," an operetta in which Gilbert and Sullivan encompass within a single act their ingenious parody of a proceeding for breach of promise, will be broadcast by the Canadian Ballad Opera Company tonight. Singing in the studios of CKGW, Toronto, the cast will address its unseen audience over WJZ's chain at 9:15 oclock. The cast includes:

Plaintiff ....Jeanne Dusseau
Counsel ....Allan Burt
Defendant ....Herbert Hewetson
Judge ....Alfred Heather
Usher ....John Detweiler

Monday, June 2.

A TRIBUTE to Sir Josiah Stamp, British financier, will be broadcast over WEAF, WJZ and networks Monday afternoon at the luncheon of the Academy of Political Science to be held at the Hotel Astor. The program will be available to a nation-wide network, beginning at 2 o'clock and continuing on the air until 3 P. M. Thomas W. Lamont, American financier, will preside.

This part of the Academy's semicentennial program is scheduled as a token of appreciation of the public services of Sir Josiah in the fields of world economic devolopment and international finance.

Rossini's overture to "William Tell" raises the ethereal curtain on the concert to be carried over WEAF's network at 8:30 o'clock Monday night. Horlick's Orchestra shares honors with a male quartet in offering the following program:

Overture to "William Tell"..........Rossini
Strictly Germ Proof
Male quartet.
A Dream ....Grieg
Schoen Rosmarin ....Kreisler
Allah's Holiday ....Friml
Across the River....................Penn
Male quartet.
Mi Amor ....Morris
Puttin' on the Ritz....................Berlin
Medley
Tell Me, Little Gypsy
How Many Times?
Looking at You, from "Wake Up and Dream"
Missouri Moon ....Lodge
If I Had a Girl Like You..........McDermott
There's Religion in Rhythm
Medley of Latest Favorites
Male quartet.
Strike Up the Band....................Gershwin

Three modern American compositions occupy a place on the orchestral program to be radiated over the WEAF network at 9:30 o'clock Monday night. They are Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue," "Song of the Bayou," by Bloom, and Grofe's "Mississippi Suite," with piano and vocal interludes.

Tuesday, June 3.

FORMER Governor Alfred E. Smith and Aldermanic President Joseph V. McKee are the chief speakers at the ceremonies incident to the official unveiling of portraits of all the Presidents of the city's Board of Aldermen, which WNYC will broadcast Tuesday afternoon at 3:15 o'clock.

Mr. Smith, himself a former Aldermanic President, and the other speakers, will pay tribute to the achievements of the men whose portraits will grace the Aldermanic Chambers, speaking from the committee room adjoining at the City Hall.

Governor Frank G. Allen of Massachusetts will inaugurate a new series of talks when he is heard over the WEAF network at 7:15 o'clock Tuesday night. The broadcast series is concerned with events that contributed toward the founding of America. The Governor's topic is "John Winthrop and the Puritans."

The first of three radio dramas which will present the entire story of "Shavings," the Cape Cod novel by Joseph C. Lincoln, will be available for listeners over WEAF's network at 7:30 o'clock Tuesday night. The presentation is said to be so arranged that each individual sketch comprises a complete drama, yet the three given on successive Tuesday nights will cover the entire novel.

Two new songs which Frank Crumit had his hand in composing will be included in the concert which he and Julia Sanderson will send out over WABC's network at 8 o'clock Tuesday night.

Oh Me, Oh My, Oh You, from "Two Little Girls in Blue"..........Youmans
Miss Sanderson and Mr. Crumit.
What'll I Do?....................Berlin
Miss Sanderson.

Miss Sanderson and Mr. Crumit.

Michael Rosenker, violinist, will interpret Kreisler's "Liebesfreud" during a program that plucks harmonies from the musical lore of many lands when the following numbers are played to listeners over WJZ's chain at 8:30 o'clock Tuesday night:

Pan-Americana ....Herbert
Overture to "Russian and Ludmilla"..Glinka
Drink to Me Only with Thine Eyes
String Group.
Entrance of the Fauns, from "Cydalise"
Pierne
Ride of the Valkyries, from "Die Walkuere"
Wagner
Liebesfreud ....Kreisler
Violin solo, Michael Rosenker.
Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana"
Mascagni
Scherzo ....MacDowell

Selections from Verdi's "Aïda" will be presented during the grand opera concert over WABC and allied stations at 10:30 o'clock Tuesday night. The Columbia Symphony Orchestra, led by Howard Barlow, with Lillian Bucknam, soprano; Barbara Maurel, contralto; Theo Karle, tenor, and Crane Calder, bass, will present this half hour program.

Wednesday, June 4.

AMERICAN listeners will receive a first-hand description of the British Derby at Epsom Downs via the radio for the first time on Wednesday. R. C. Lyle, sports edito of The London Times, will actuate the microphone. Broadcasting is scheduled to begin at 9:45 A. M., Eastern Daylight Saving Time, over WABC's network.

Land wires will carry the description to the short-wave station of the British Broadcasting Company in London, whence it will be brought to America by wireless telephony and picked up here by a receiving station. From that point it will be transmitted by land wires to WABC for distribution in this country.

When Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson delivers a memorial address commemorating the centenary of the death of General Antonio José de Sucre, famous South American soldier and statesman, the ceremonies will be broadcast over WABC and WJZ's network from the Hall of the John S. Young, Announcer for WEAF and WJZ.

Americas in the Pan American Union in Washington. The program will be heard on Wednesday at 4 o'clock, Eastern Daylight Saving Time. A seventy-piece orchestra, assembled from the various service bands, will play a medley of national anthems of twenty-one nations.

Arthur C. (Dazzy) Vance, star pitcher of the Brooklyn Robins, will analyze the current baseball season when he is interviewed by Grantland Rice during the program to be presented over WEAF's network at 10:30 o'clock Wednesday night. Joy's Orchestra will furnish the musical part of the program.

Thursday, June 5.

THE graduation exercises of the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, the climax of the "June week" festivities of the midshipmen, will be broadcast for the first time by WABC's network on Thursday. The ceremonies will be on the air from 11:45 A. M. to 1 P. M., Eastern Daylight Saving Time. The names of the 408 graduates will be announced by Secretary of the Navy Charles Francis Adams, who will present the diplomas. The principal addresses will be delivered by Rear Admiral S. S. Robison, superintendent of the Naval Academy, and by Secretary Adams. The graduates will sing "Navy Blue and Gold" and the Naval Academy Band will conclude the ceremonies by playing "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Harry Braun, violinist, will play Vivaldi's "Concerto in A Minor" during the symphony orchestra concert conducted by Philip James. The broadcast is scheduled for Thursday night at 8 o'clock over WOR's wave.

Great G Minor Fugue....................Bach
Suite in Three Movements..........Haubiel
Concerto in A minor..........Vivaldi
Violin solo, Harry Braun.
Pavane ....Ravel
Orgies of the Spirits (Noure et Anitra).
Ilynsky
Apres l'Ete ....Schmitt
Thousand and One Nights Waltz....Strauss
Danse Slave ....Chabrier

Frances Williams comes from musical comedy to match her crooning ability with that of Rudy Vallee, who has crooned his way up the radio ladder of fame. They will both be heard during the broadcast by the Valee Orchestra over WEAF's network on Thursday night at 8 o'clock.

The intercollegiate debate between the teams of Fordham and New York Universities will be broadcast over WNYC's wave on Thursday night at 8:45 o'clock. The subject is, "Resolved, that the nations of the earth pursue a policy of disarmament except for such forces as are necessary for policing." New York University will uphold the affirmative side of the question, Fordham the negative.

Music for the most part in the serious mood has been chosen for the orchestral broadcast conducted by Eugene Ormandy to be offered to listeners over WEAF's network at 9:30 o'clock Thursday night. Oliver Smith, tenor, is listed as soloist during this concert:

Overture to "The Bartered Bride"...Smetana
Andantino ....Lemare
Orchestra.
Inflammatus from "Stabat Mater"...Rossini
Trumpet solo, Benny Baker.
Morena y Sevillana....................Madura
Singing a Song to the Stars..........Meyers

Quartet.
Dreamin' Time ....Strickland
Lois Bennett and Mary Hopple.
What Do I Care?
Sing, You Sinners,
Orchestra.
Blue Room ....Rodgers
Ensemble.

Countess Olga Albani, as soprano soloist, sings "Down the River of Golden Dreams" as her contribution to the orchestral concert to be radioed over WJZ's system at 10:30 o'clock Friday night.

Saturday, June 7.

THE Ponce Sisters, harmonizers and instrumentalists, will cavort before the WEAF microphone Saturday night at 11 o'clock, entertaining auditors over its network with the following numbers:

Cross Your Fingers..........Davis
Exactly Like You..........McHugh
Dolly Dimples ....Alter
Piano solo, Ethel Ponce.
Ole Zip Coon..........Traditional Telling It to the Daisies..........Warren

NOTES ON BROADCAST MUSIC

By BENJAMIN GROSBAYNE.

CHARLES T. GRIFFES'S "The Pleasure-Dome of Kubla Khan" will be played over WJZ this afternoon at 2 o'clock by the Roxy Symphony, Orchestra, Joseph Littau conducting.

Griffes was born in Elmira in 1884 and died in New York City in 1920 after a brief career pathetically paralleling in bitter neglect and disillusionment the experiences of Poe and Stephens Collins Foster. His best work was still before him.

The tone poem is based upon Samuel Taylor Coleridge's poem "Kubla Khan," which there is much evidence to credit was written while the poet was dreaming under the influence of opium. Waking up before the dream was completed, he was unable to finish the stanzas. Kublai Khan (1214-1294) was the great Khan (Prince) who founded the Mongol dynasty.

The poem, which begins with the lines

"In Xanadu did Kubla Khan
A stately pleasure-dome decree":

achieves much of its weird effect by reiteration of the same sounds.

"I have taken as a basis for my work," wrote the composer for the program notes of the first performance in 1919 in Boston, "those lines of Coleridge's poem describing the "stately pleasure-dome," the "sunny pleasure-dome with caves of ice," the "miracle of rare device."

"I have given my imagination free rein in the description of the strange palace, as well as of purely imaginary revelry which might take place there. The vague, foggy beginning suggests the sacred river, running 'through caverns measureless to man down to a sunless sea.' Then gradually rise the outlines of the palace, 'with walls and towers girdling round.' The gardens with fountains and 'sunny spots of greenery' are next suggested. From inside come sounds of dancing and revelry, which increase to a wild climax and then suddenly break off. There is a return to the original mood suggesting the sacred river and 'caves of ice.'"

The music shows distinctly French influences. The eery tone colors are partly obtained by English horn, oboe, celesta and the harps, horns, gong and soft strings. Especially in the final few measures is the effect suggestive of celestial soaring.

The remaining items on the program are the overture from Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream," "Sounds of the Forest" (Waldweben) from Wagner's "Siegfried," "Siegmund's Love Song" and the "Ride of the Valkyries" from Wagner's "Walküre."

An English "Stars and Stripes."

SIR EDWARD ELGAR'S "Pomp and Circumstance" will form part of the program to be played tomorrow night at 10 o'clock over WJZ by a Symphony Orchestra, broadcasting from Rochester.

The composer wrote two of the marches in this set in 1901 for the Promenade Concerts in London and a third in 1905. In the trio of one of these occurs the famous stirring and irresistibly swinging melody. This the composer used later for his "Land of Hope and Glory" as a setting to Benson's "Coronation Ode" which Elgar wrote for King Edward VII's coronation. The composer was knighted the following year.

The motto of the music is taken from Lord de Abley's lines beginning

"Like a proud music that draws men to die
Madly upon the spears in martial ecstasy,
A measure that sets heaven in all the veins
And iron in their blood
I hear the Nation march.

The English view is that the music succeeds in portraying the British soldiers' aspirations and yet is, at the same time, within the comprehension of these soldiers. Whenever the march is played, its effect upon the British auditor is much the same as that of Sousa's "Stars and Stripes" march upon the Americans.

Dirge for a Favorite Child.

MAURICE RAVEL'S "Pavane for a Deceased Infant" is among the items given over WOR on Thursday at 8 o'clock by a symphony orchestra, Philip James conducting.

Ravel has two sides. One is the brilliant and almost diabolically clever side revealed in his sensational "Bolero" and in compositions like his "Tzigane" for violin solo; the other is shown in his "Valse nobles et sentimentales" and compositions like the present and his "Mother Goose Suite." The "Pavane" is thought by some to be meant as a funeral march for an "Infanta," but the composer himself is reported to have said that any infant was meant.

Like its ancestors of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, Ravel's elegiac dirge is on four-beat rhythm. The melody suggests the church in its severe and medieval scale outline. It is not somber or gloomy as many other composers might have written such a piece, but rather tenderly melancholy and wistful. In contrast to this antique flavor, there is a startling modernism in some of the chords which other composers were not ashamed to appropriate later.

It was a stroke of Ravel's to leave out many of the thirds in the chords, and the resulting emptiness somehow evokes the void made by the feeling that the favorite child is gone.

The solo horn plays the opening theme against the lugubrious tone of the accompanying bassoon, while the strings, with their dry, plucked and muted notes, evoke an autumnal atmosphere of dead leaves. The succeeding oboe-bassoon duet is pastoral. The strings repeat the melody and the flute solo follows. At the climax the flutes and violins have the original theme.

First written for piano, it was later arranged for a miniature orchestra quite in keeping with its subject. There are flutes, clarinets, bassoons and horns doubled, strings, an oboe and harp.

A Dream Song.

THE "Prize Song" from Wagner's "Die Meistersinger" is to be included among the violin solos to be played over WEAF Thursday night at 10 o'clock by Mischa Elman.

The "Prize Song" is the lyrical climax of the opera, and is Walter's dream song to Eva, whom he loves. Like the theme of the opera, which pokes fun at critics, as George Bernard Shaw did in "Fanny's First Play," the famous melody which wins the laurel crown and Eva's hand shows "that music's future lies in the happy union of the traditional and the inspired."

August Wilhelmj (1845-1908), who arranged the music for violin solo, was one of the greatest violinists of all time. Called the German Paganini, he was concertmaster of Baireuth in 1876, and got the Wagner tradition first hand. In 1885 he was invited by the Turkish Sultan to play for the royal harem, perhaps a unique experience, and was presented with many beautiful diamonds and made a member of the Order of Medjidie after the concert.

The arrangement is rather difficult. This, of course, does not mean much to a virtuoso. The very broad and soaring three-beat melody demands a full and swinging tone and a control of the bow somewhat like that of the breath in a singer. When a great artist plays this it sounds quite easy and simple, which is, after all, quite a compliment to the player. Actually only few can do this as if it were natural.

The solo violin first plays the melody simply and then an octave higher. The accompaniment also plays it in imitation, and then both parts play small phrases from the melody in varied form. At the end of the first part especially there are a series of lacelike passages in the violin part which demand the outmost neatness. Otherwise the melodic outline is lost. Wilhemj has interwoven the voice and orchestral parts in masterly fashion, and made the arrangement one of the standard items of the violinist's repertory

THE SPOKEN WORD FINDS A CHAMPION

Radio and Talking Picture Require Better Diction—Colleges Consider Teaching Technique

By RICHARD B. O'BRIEN.

PERHAPS never before has there been a greater urgency for better speech and diction than exists today. Never was the public universally afforded an opportunity to listen to such a volume and variety of speech as is provided today through the mediums of radio broadcasting and the audible screen. Only a few years back the spoken word, as a moving, vital force in the realm of entertainment and in the public forum, seemed to be falling into decadence, with the silent films challenging the supremacy of the speaking stage, and radio still an unreckoned factor in the transmission of spoken language. Today colleges are considering the substitution of courses in microphone technique to replace public speaking classes.

Today, with the universality of radio and the talking pictures, speech and diction is an open sesame for all auditors who own a receiving set or purchase a ticket of admission to a talking-picture theatre. There is a greater need than ever for good diction with a world-wide public sitting in the judgment seat. To meet this need there seems to be a happy renascence of the golden age of the spoken word, thanks to the kindred conveyances of the microphone and the talking screen.

When radio was young, strict adherence to the qualities of speech and correct diction such as now exists was unknown. The public's attention in the early days of broadcasting was focused on the marvel of the new winged voice plucked out of the ether rather than on the art of speech, which, after all, was nothing new and something to be found in the textbooks. But as radio progressed attention was turned to the novel and varied features that the broadcasters offered; also the hunt for distant stations was then on. But today with radio and the talkies no longer a novelty, the public has become much more critical and nothing short of perfection in voice and diction will do.

The Microphonic Art.

The old careless style of announcing belongs to a day that is long forgotten, when the screen was still searching for a voice. Now the vocal qualities of a radio performer or a film player are checked and double checked, to borrow the words of those current radio favorites, Amos 'n' Andy. While vocal quality is important to an actor in the talking pictures, it is indispensable to a radio performer. The little accidents of gesture and facial expression, the rhythm of physical movement, the beauty of the artistic setting in a scene, all contributing factors to success on the screen, are lacking when the performer stands unseen and unseeing before the microphone, alone and yet within the hearing of millions. Then voice and the power of projecting it properly is all that matters.

The declining art of oratory has been given new life by radio broadcasting, according to Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, Secretary of the Interior. Addressing an unresponsive microphone forces the speaker to depend more upon intellect and less upon an appeal to the emotions, and consequently requires more training, he pointed out recently in an address before the National Oratorical contest in Washington.

This fact, he said, counteracted against a tendency to regard public speaking as shallow and artificial. "Buncombe over the radio sounds like buncombe," he added, and accordingly speakers have to be more careful about the accuracy of their statements.

William P. Banning, assistant vice president of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, sums up the case in the Bell Telephone Quarterly.

"With more than 600 licensed broadcasting stations," said Mr. Banning, "a radio set for every seven families, and sound pictures affording entertainment for millions weekly, the technique of speaking, as revealed by radio announcer, political orator, occasional speaker or screen actor, is open to analysis that is severely critical. Listeners in millions of homes, schoolrooms and theatres, with daily opportunity for contrasting methods as well as messages, are constantly changing their standards. Speakers have become aware that the human voice is on trial everywhere.

"Speech itself has thus been advertised in an inescapable way by its newer transmission agencies, and a tremendous impetus has been given to the activities that are promoting better speech. The last convention of the National Association of Teachers of Speech gave much of its time to discussion of the new conditions, hailing such events as the annual award by the American Academy of Arts and Letters of a medal for a radio announcer using the best diction."

The Academy's Award.

Radio announcers, now looked upon as paragons of the spoken word, are anxiously looking ahead to June 4, when the forthcoming verdict of the radio committee of the American Academy of Arts and Letters will award the second medal to the announcer who best meets the requirements of the jury in the matter of diction. The burning question now is: "What lucky courier of the air will win the honor this year?"

It will be remembered that this distinction was conferred for the first time last year by the academy upon Milton Cross, who is out of the running this year because he captured the award in 1929. More than 100 announcers have submitted their voices for the approval of Hamlin Garland, chairman, and his academy committee for good diction on the radio. The committee has summoned to its assistance what is described as a corresponding advisory committee, which means that teachers of speech from various educational institutions throughout the country have a voice in the selection. The balloting has already taken place and the results will be announced on June 4.

The committee considered five features that every announcer in the top-notch group should exemplify over the radio. They are pronunciation, articulation, tone quality, accent and cultural effect.

A Winner's Opinion.

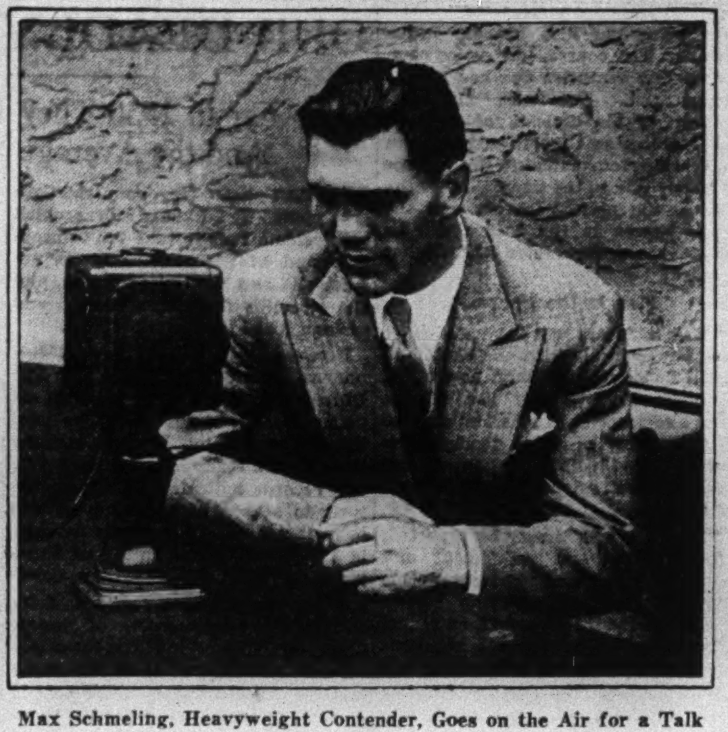
Milton Cross declares that as an announcer's voice is his whole personality to the people, it is important to please. An announcer, he said, must keep his voice healthy, well-dressed and cheerful, or in a few minutes it can badly damage a career that has taken years to build.

"Keeping a voice well-dressed is an important thing," said Mr. Cross. "Language, like clothing, changes in style, and while the use of slang is not considered the best of form of speech, occasionally the use of idiomatic phrases helps. There is nothing that falls so flat on the listeners' ears as a bit of slang or idiom that is out of date. The announcer must use the speech of 1930 if he is speaking in that year and not that of 1920, which, strange to say, is actually different. Accents dress a voice. Just as a person may overdress, so may a voice be overdressed with accent and inflection. Too many broad A's and too frequent use of unfamiliar words will make a voice seem affected and unnatural instead of cultured. The announcer who affects a superior attitude in his remarks to his invisible audience won't hold the affection and regard of that invisible following over night. Announcers haven't a slogan, but if ever they decide to adopt one I hope it will be a phrase of two words: 'Be Natural.'"

It doesn't seem that the precepts of speech set down by Shakespeare have changed appreciably with the passing of the centuries, and what held true on a bare Elizabethan stage may be applied today to a performer before the microphone:

"Speak the speech, I pray you, as I pronounce it to you, trippingly on the tongue: for if you mouth it, as many of your players do, I had as lief the town crier spoke my lines. * * * the purpose of playing * * * at the first and now, was and is, to hold, as 'twere, the mirror up to nature."

But then, it is impossible that the bard could have had the microphone in mind. * * *



Max Schmeling, Heavyweight Contender, Goes on the Air for a Talk With His Mother in Germany via WGY's Short-Wave Station. The Sharkey-Schmeling Bout on June 12 Will Be Broadcast by Either the WEAF or WJZ Network.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Static-Like Noise Is Often Caused by Loose Connection or a Defective Tube

QUESTION—I have a battery-operated radio set using 301A tubes. It is bright, new and clean, including the antenna and lead-in. I use "A" and "B" batteries to power the set, and all are new. I never had any interference here with a discarded set, but when this one is operated there is a sound like a rush of a mighty wind or torrents of water which drowns out all the music. With the loudspeaker it is unbearable and with the head phones worse. With the loudspeaker in operation one can tell that the antenna is bringing in good music, but the noise makes one turn off the set. With the antenna and ground wires detached from the receiver it is just the same. It is a fine outfit, but useless. Can you tell me what to do? H. L. C. ANSWER—A leaking by-pass condenser in the set, or an imperfect connection where two wires are joined together, may be causing the trouble. One or more tubes may be making poor connections with the metal contacts inside the tube sockets. With the set operating, take hold of the tubes by the top, one at a time, and move them gently from side to side. If this produces a crackling noise in the speaker it indicates a poor contact. Try this method on the other parts of the set, such as the radio frequency tuning coils. With a small piece of dry wood prod around carefully among the wires of the set to see if a bad connection can be discovered. Secure a tube which is known to be in good condition and substitute it in turn in the sockets. One bad tube would cause this trouble.

QUSTION—How much does the National Broadcasting Company have to pay stations in its network every hour they operate with it? (2) Please tell me why I cannot get WEAF very strong here at the City Hospital on Welfare Island. Is it using a power of 50,000 watts? J. A. C. ANSWER—In general, the N. B. C. pays $50 an hour to every station in its networks which takes a sponsored program supplied by wire. When a chain station takes a sustaining or unsponsored program from the N. B. C. studios the station pays at the rate of about $25 per hour. The power is 50,000 watts. Reception of WEAF is difficult in some localities about New York and New Jersey, due to shielding by tall steel structures and "dead spots." Steps are now being taken to make the transmitter more effective in such areas.

QUESTION—I recently purchased a dynamic speaker, but when using it I find that intermittent surges of current creep in and destroy the signal. By placing a pair of head phones in series with the set and the speaker I can make the trouble less bothersome, but still it is not clear. The set works O. K. with a cone speaker. Would a condenser in series with the speaker help the trouble? (2) The set uses five 301s and 171 power tube, powered from an "A" storage battery and a 180-volt "B" eliminator. The output transformer is one-to-one ratio. The dynamic works better with this transformer in the circuit than without it. Why? A. D. V. ANSWER—The trouble is probably overloading of the power tube when the dynamic is operated, as there is a tendency to turn up the volume more with a dynamic, because they, as a rule, are less sensitive than cone speakers. The eliminator should be checked by a radio technician to see if the power tube is being supplied with correct "B" and "C" voltages. If the power tube is operated correctly, the dynamic speaker should give better results without the output transformer because the speaker has a special transformer installed in the base.

QUESTION—I have a Crosley receiver that uses four 199 tubes and one 120 tube, and do not get much distance or volume. Could I use four 201A tubes and a 212A with a storage battery? (2) Would the use of more than one 212A instead of a 201A increase the distance and volume? (3) Does the 212A tube have a higher amplification factor than the 201A? (4) Could I use the new 222 screen-grid, which I understand has an amplification factor of 300, in the R. F. stages?—E. A. R. ANSWER—No, not without making changes in the set. Try a longer outdoor antenna for more volume and distance. (2) No. (3) Yes, the 212A tube will amplify slightly more in the proper circuit, but it is not advised for this receiver except as an output power tube. (4) Not without radical changes in circuit and design.

TRADE NOTES AND COMMENT

Caldwell Finds 175 Uses for the Vacuum Tube in Radio and Other Fields

MORE than 175 uses for vacuum tubes outside the radio field have been found by O. H. Caldwell, former Federal Radio Commissioner, who is now active in the development of the new industry called electronics.

"Looked at broadly, the importance of the invention of the electron tube can be compared only with Archimedes' classical discovery of the power of the lever, and his proud boast that, with an adequate fulcrum, he could move the world," said Mr. Caldwell. "For the vacuum tube is, in effect, an electrical lever; its grid input represents the short arm and its cathode output the long arm. And just as the principle of the lever is used again and again in every element of every machine built in this mechanical age, so the introduction of the vacuum tube and its associated circuits presents almost inconceivable potentialities in the electrical future.

"So rapidly are new electronic applications coming that, within a few years, one may safely predict the tube will be a universal factor in everyday life, and nothing that the average man sees, hears or buys but will be controlled, regulated or affected in some important respect by an electronic tube."

J. G. Tritsch, former manager of stations WGHP, Detroit, Mich., and WSPD, Toledo, Ohio, has secured control of station WMAN, Columbus. The Columbus broadcaster recently was purchased by a Philadelphia concern, represented locally by Emmanuel Kun, which disposed of its holdings to Tritsch.

How much does it cost to operate a radio receiver? A typical set consumes a maximum of 90-watts, according to Stromberg-Carlson engineers. This is as much power as used by two 45-watt electric lamps. Figured at the rate of 10 cents per kilowatt hour, it costs about nine-tenths of a cent to run the set for an hour.

What is the life of a radio set? The engineers at Rochester assert that under ordinary conditions "at least equal to the human span." They point out that a modern set is subject to mechanical wear in only three points: the variable condenser bearings, the volume control unit and "on" and "off" switch. Other parts likely to break down eventually are resistors and fixed condensers. Vacuum tubes must be replaced from time to time as they wear out electrically. It is generally considered good policy to replace tubes once a year. The fact that a tube may be in use three years and still light is no indication that it is efficient.

As far as mechanical wear is concerned a radio set may last for three score and ten years, but one of the 1930 sets will be an item of curiosity, a real antique, in the television days, seventy years from now.

Arthur T. Haugh has been appointed sales manager of domestic and foreign sales for the Zenith Radio Corporation, according to Paul B. Klugh, vice president. Mr. Haugh will assume charge of the sales of the new receivers to be introduced at the trade show this week.

A new automobile radio receiver in kit form will be placed on the market shortly by the Pilot Radio and Tube Corporation of Brooklyn, according to Charles Gilbert, director of merchandising. The receiver fits into a steel case intended for mounting on the running board of the car. It is operated by a small control panel, which is connected to the receiver itself by a flexible cable and series of connection wires. A cone speaker of the magnetic type will be supplied as an accessory.

STATIC'S RUMBLING GROWS WEAKER

High Power Broadcasting Gives Engineers Victory Over Summer's Atmospheric Noises

SUMMER is no longer a bugaboo of radio. Static, the demon radio listeners have known since the first signal flashed through the ether, still crackles and roars during the hot months, but year by year its rumblings are growing weaker. The dream of the radio engineer that it may be eliminated entirely has not been realized, but step by step it has been driven into the background.

This year, in contrast to the past, radio listeners are not likely to let batteries run down and dust accumulate on the dials, because programs will remain up to the Winter standard, and in the majority of cases receiving equipment now in use will bring in entertainment without interruption.

A multitude of factors is responsible for year-round radio. Broadly they may be summed up in a phrase—improvement of transmitters and receivers. Ten years ago, 500 watts were regarded as high power for a broadcaster. Today 50,000 watts are considered as high power. There are a dozen stations in the United States whose aerials are actuated by this much or more electrical energy.

This multiplication of transmitting power has the same effect upon the old-style sets as upon the new. It increases the signal level over the noise level. The result is that, with any type of receiver, programs should be easily audible at all times this Summer at least fifty miles from a broadcaster. The majority of receiving sets are believed to be within this distance.

Another improvement in reception brought about at the transmitting station is that in modulation. A greater proportion of the energy radiated is now modulated, which means that under modern radio engineering practice a greater proportion of the electrical energy that is used in broadcasting actually comes out of the loud-speaker in the form of voice or music.

The radio engineer cannot claim a complete victory, because an electrical storm directly overhead can still mangle even a strong program; but the day is past when almost any electrical disturbance can turn a program into what sounds like a major artillery engagement.

Greater efficiency at the receiving end centres in two fields of development, sharper tuning and better tubes. The sharper the tuning, the narrower the wave length band upon which static can affect a receiver, and the lower the volume of static. Improved tubes, notably the screen grid, have helped to achieve finer tuning.

These are by no means the only improvements. Others, such as visual tuning devices and a sensitivity control which automatically cuts down the volume of excessively loud signals, have come to the assistance of the radio listener. And now, with the increasing use of radio-phonograph combinations, even the most violent thunder storm cannot rob listeners of Summer musical entertainment.

In view of all this Ray H. Manson, chief engineer of the Stromberg-Carlson Manufacturing Company, finds it "almost amusing now to think that just a few years ago people used to let their batteries run down in the late Spring and put their radio on the shelf for the Summer.

"But one can hardly blame them," he asserts, "because in those days the limits of broadcast reception were vastly diminished in the Summer time. The 'noise' level compared to strength of desired broadcast signal was almost unbearably high and broadcast stations slackened their program efforts during the Summer months. In fact, there was a general let-down on the part of the broadcaster, the listener and the manufacturer."

In contrast, today some of the best programs to be heard are broadcast in the Summer. The popular daily and weekly features continue throughout the year and in addition there are such broadcasts as the Philharmonic Orchestra at Lewisohn Stadium and Goldman's band on the New York University Campus and on the Mall in Central Park.

NEW EQUIPMENT FOR WCSH.

Governor William T. Gardiner of Maine is expected to officiate at the inaugural program tonight at 7:30 o'clock of WCSH, Portland, Me., when that station goes on the air for the first time with its new transmitter.

The new 5,000-watt equipment, operating on 940 kilocycles, is limited by the Radio Commission to 1,000-watt input, but application for use of more power has been made. Test programs have indicated the station's ability to cover Northern New England, the eastern maritime Provinces of Canada, and points more distant.

The central control point for the station is in the Congress Square Hotel; the transmitter is located at Scarboro, six miles out of town.

INTRODUCING THE CONVERTIBLE
Console
—A novel Stromberg-Carlson, which is either a Receiver alone—or a Receiver and a Phonograph

NO. 11 STROMBERG-CARLSON "CONVERTIBLE" CONSOLE
Uses 4 UY-224 Screen Grid, 2 UX-245 in Push-Pull and one UX-280 Radiotrons. Channel Calibrated Dial. Range Control. Walnut finish cabinet. Price, less tubes $285.00

View of No. 1 Phonograph Panel Assembly.

DEMAND for an attractive radio console which at any time could be converted into an instrument for electrical reproduction of records at nominal cost, inspired this new No. 11 Stromberg-Carlson.

Advance features give it a performance quality never before made available in a broadcast receiver.

This new quality is "FULL DIAL EFFICIENCY"—a Stromberg-Carlson development that gives UNIFORMLY SHARP TUNING WITH THE SAME SUPERB TONE QUALITY ON EVERY BROADCAST CHANNEL; ALSO, THE SAME HIGH SENSITIVITY AT EVERY DIAL SETTING.

Tonal brilliance at the high end of the dial no longer need be compromised for selectivity at the low end, or vice versa. Now, in this new Stromberg-Carlson you have amazing consistency of performance on every one of the 95 broadcast channels which are calibrated on its dial.

The handsome cabinet itself is equally distinctive, for it is so ingeniously constructed that it is no larger than a radio console only, yet contains space for the phonograph equipment, when you wish. Product of Stromberg-Carlson's telephone and radio laboratories it further justifies the slogan, "There Is Nothing Finer Than a Stromberg-Carlson."

Other standard Stromberg-Carlsons are Nos. 641, 645 (Direct Current), 652, 846 and 654, ranging in price from $155 to $369. Custom-built period cabinet models from $695 to $795. Prices, less tubes. For best results buy Stromberg-Carlson double-tested Radiotron tubes in sealed package.

By RICHARD B. O'BRIEN.

PERHAPS never before has there been a greater urgency for better speech and diction than exists today. Never was the public universally afforded an opportunity to listen to such a volume and variety of speech as is provided today through the mediums of radio broadcasting and the audible screen. Only a few years back the spoken word, as a moving, vital force in the realm of entertainment and in the public forum, seemed to be falling into decadence, with the silent films challenging the supremacy of the speaking stage, and radio still an unreckoned factor in the transmission of spoken language. Today colleges are considering the substitution of courses in microphone technique to replace public speaking classes.

Today, with the universality of radio and the talking pictures, speech and diction is an open sesame for all auditors who own a receiving set or purchase a ticket of admission to a talking-picture theatre. There is a greater need than ever for good diction with a world-wide public sitting in the judgment seat. To meet this need there seems to be a happy renascence of the golden age of the spoken word, thanks to the kindred conveyances of the microphone and the talking screen.

When radio was young, strict adherence to the qualities of speech and correct diction such as now exists was unknown. The public's attention in the early days of broadcasting was focused on the marvel of the new winged voice plucked out of the ether rather than on the art of speech, which, after all, was nothing new and something to be found in the textbooks. But as radio progressed attention was turned to the novel and varied features that the broadcasters offered; also the hunt for distant stations was then on. But today with radio and the talkies no longer a novelty, the public has become much more critical and nothing short of perfection in voice and diction will do.

The Microphonic Art.

The old careless style of announcing belongs to a day that is long forgotten, when the screen was still searching for a voice. Now the vocal qualities of a radio performer or a film player are checked and double checked, to borrow the words of those current radio favorites, Amos 'n' Andy. While vocal quality is important to an actor in the talking pictures, it is indispensable to a radio performer. The little accidents of gesture and facial expression, the rhythm of physical movement, the beauty of the artistic setting in a scene, all contributing factors to success on the screen, are lacking when the performer stands unseen and unseeing before the microphone, alone and yet within the hearing of millions. Then voice and the power of projecting it properly is all that matters.

The declining art of oratory has been given new life by radio broadcasting, according to Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, Secretary of the Interior. Addressing an unresponsive microphone forces the speaker to depend more upon intellect and less upon an appeal to the emotions, and consequently requires more training, he pointed out recently in an address before the National Oratorical contest in Washington.

This fact, he said, counteracted against a tendency to regard public speaking as shallow and artificial. "Buncombe over the radio sounds like buncombe," he added, and accordingly speakers have to be more careful about the accuracy of their statements.

William P. Banning, assistant vice president of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, sums up the case in the Bell Telephone Quarterly.

"With more than 600 licensed broadcasting stations," said Mr. Banning, "a radio set for every seven families, and sound pictures affording entertainment for millions weekly, the technique of speaking, as revealed by radio announcer, political orator, occasional speaker or screen actor, is open to analysis that is severely critical. Listeners in millions of homes, schoolrooms and theatres, with daily opportunity for contrasting methods as well as messages, are constantly changing their standards. Speakers have become aware that the human voice is on trial everywhere.

"Speech itself has thus been advertised in an inescapable way by its newer transmission agencies, and a tremendous impetus has been given to the activities that are promoting better speech. The last convention of the National Association of Teachers of Speech gave much of its time to discussion of the new conditions, hailing such events as the annual award by the American Academy of Arts and Letters of a medal for a radio announcer using the best diction."

The Academy's Award.

Radio announcers, now looked upon as paragons of the spoken word, are anxiously looking ahead to June 4, when the forthcoming verdict of the radio committee of the American Academy of Arts and Letters will award the second medal to the announcer who best meets the requirements of the jury in the matter of diction. The burning question now is: "What lucky courier of the air will win the honor this year?"

It will be remembered that this distinction was conferred for the first time last year by the academy upon Milton Cross, who is out of the running this year because he captured the award in 1929. More than 100 announcers have submitted their voices for the approval of Hamlin Garland, chairman, and his academy committee for good diction on the radio.

The committee has summoned to its assistance what is described as a corresponding advisory committee, which means that teachers of speech from various educational institutions throughout the country have a voice in the selection. The balloting has already taken place and the results will be announced on June 4.

The committee considered five features that every announcer in the top-notch group should exemplify over the radio. They are pronunciation, articulation, tone quality, accent and cultural effect.

A Winner's Opinion.

Milton Cross declares that as an announcer's voice is his whole personality to the people, it is important to please. An announcer, he said, must keep his voice healthy, well-dressed and cheerful, or in a few minutes it can badly damage a career that has taken years to build.

"Keeping a voice well-dressed is an important thing," said Mr. Cross. "Language, like clothing, changes in style, and while the use of slang is not considered the best of form of speech, occasionally the use of idiomatic phrases helps. There is nothing that falls so flat on the listeners' ears as a bit of slang or idiom that is out of date. The announcer must use the speech of 1930 if he is speaking in that year and not that of 1920, which, strange to say, is actually different. Accents dress a voice. Just as a person may overdress, so may a voice be overdressed with accent and inflection. Too many broad A's and too frequent use of unfamiliar words will make a voice seem affected and unnatural instead of cultured. The announcer who affects a superior attitude in his remarks to his invisible audience won't hold the affection and regard of that invisible following over night. Announcers haven't a slogan, but if ever they decide to adopt one I hope it will be a phrase of two words: 'Be Natural.'"

It doesn't seem that the precepts of speech set down by Shakespeare have changed appreciably with the passing of the centuries, and what held true on a bare Elizabethan stage may be applied today to a performer before the microphone:

"Speak the speech, I pray you, as I pronounce it to you, trippingly on the tongue: for if you mouth it, as many of your players do, I had as lief the town crier spoke my lines. * * * the purpose of playing * * * at the first and now, was and is, to hold, as 'twere, the mirror up to nature."

But then, it is impossible that the bard could have had the microphone in mind. * * *

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Static-Like Noise Is Often Caused by Loose Connection or a Defective Tube

QUESTION—I have a battery-operated radio set using 301A tubes. It is bright, new and clean, including the antenna and lead-in. I use "A" and "B" batteries to power the set, and all are new. I never had any interference here with a discarded set, but when this one is operated there is a sound like a rush of a mighty wind or torrents of water which drowns out all the music. With the loud-speaker it is unbearable and with the head phones worse. With the loud-speaker in operation one can tell that the antenna is bringing in good music, but the noise makes one turn off the set. With the antenna and ground wires detached from the receiver it is just the same. It is a fine outfit, but useless. Can you tell me what to do? H. L. C. ANSWER—A leaking by-pass condenser in the set, or an imperfect connection where two wires are joined together, may be causing the trouble. One or more tubes may be making poor connections with the metal contacts inside the tube sockets. With the set operating, take hold of the tubes by the top, one at a time, and move them gently from side to side. If this produces a crackling noise in the speaker it indicates a poor contact. Try this method on the other parts of the set, such as the radio frequency tuning coils. With a small piece of dry wood prod around carefully among the wires of the set to see if a bad connection can be discovered. Secure a tube which is known to be in good condition and substitute it in turn in the sockets. One bad tube would cause this trouble.

QUSTION—How much does the National Broadcasting Company have to pay stations in its network every hour they operate with it? (2) Please tell me why I cannot get WEAF very strong here at the City Hospital on Welfare Island. Is it using a power of 50,000 watts? J. A. C. ANSWER—In general, the N. B. C. pays $50 an hour to every station in its networks which takes a sponsored program supplied by wire. When a chain station takes a sustaining or unsponsored program from the N. B. C. studios the station pays at the rate of about $25 per hour. The power is 50,000 watts. Reception of WEAF is difficult in some localities about New York and New Jersey, due to shielding by tall steel structures and "dead spots." Steps are now being taken to make the transmitter more effective in such areas.

QUESTION—I recently purchased a dynamic speaker, but when using it I find that intermittent surges of current creep in and destroy the signal. By placing a pair of head phones in series with the set and the speaker I can make the trouble less bothersome, but still it is not clear. The set works O. K. with a cone speaker. Would a condenser in series with the speaker help the trouble? (2) The set uses five 301s and 171 power tube, powered from an "A" storage battery and a 180-volt "B" eliminator. The output transformer is one-to-one ratio. The dynamic works better with this transformer in the circuit than without it. Why? A. D. V. ANSWER—The trouble is probably overloading of the power tube when the dynamic is operated, as there is a tendency to turn up the volume more with a dynamic, because they, as a rule, are less sensitive than cone speakers. The eliminator should be checked by a radio technician to see if the power tube is being supplied with correct "B" and "C" voltages. If the power tube is operated correctly, the dynamic speaker should give better results without the output transformer because the speaker has a special transformer installed in the base.

QUESTION—I have a Crosley receiver that uses four 199 tubes and one 120 tube, and do not get much distance or volume. Could I use four 201A tubes and a 212A with a storage battery? (2) Would the use of more than one 212A instead of a 201A increase the distance and volume? (3) Does the 212A tube have a higher amplification factor than the 201A? (4) Could I use the new 222 screen-grid, which I understand has an amplification factor of 300, in the R. F. stages?—E. A. R. ANSWER—No, not without making changes in the set. Try a longer outdoor antenna for more volume and distance. (2) No. (3) Yes, the 212A tube will amplify slightly more in the proper circuit, but it is not advised for this receiver except as an output power tube. (4) Not without radical changes in circuit and design.

Caldwell Finds 175 Uses for the Vacuum Tube in Radio and Other Fields

MORE than 175 uses for vacuum tubes outside the radio field have been found by O. H. Caldwell, former Federal Radio Commissioner, who is now active in the development of the new industry called electronics.

Advance features give it a performance quality never before made available in a broadcast receiver.

This new quality is "FULL DIAL EFFICIENCY"—a Stromberg-Carlson development that gives UNIFORMLY SHARP TUNING WITH THE SAME SUPERB TONE QUALITY ON EVERY BROADCAST CHANNEL; ALSO, THE SAME HIGH SENSITIVITY AT EVERY DIAL SETTING.

Tonal brilliance at the high end of the dial no longer need be compromised for selectivity at the low end, or vice versa. Now, in this new Stromberg-Carlson you have amazing consistency of performance on every one of the 95 broadcast channels which are calibrated on its dial.

The handsome cabinet itself is equally distinctive, for it is so ingeniously constructed that it is no larger than a radio console only, yet contains space for the phonograph equipment, when you wish. Product of Stromberg-Carlson's telephone and radio laboratories it further justifies the slogan, "There Is Nothing Finer Than a Stromberg-Carlson."

Other standard Stromberg-Carlsons are Nos. 641, 645 (Direct Current), 652, 846 and 654, ranging in price from $155 to $369. Custom-built period cabinet models from $695 to $795. Prices, less tubes. For best results buy Stromberg-Carlson double-tested Radiotron tubes in sealed package.

THE AMERICAN JAW AS CHANGED BY DIET

Dentists Report a Stage in the Processes of Human Evolution Which Still Affect Types

By H. GORDON GARBEDIAN.

THE human jaw is shrinking. If the modern tendency for mankind to become more and more "rabbit mouthed" continues, Americans some generations from now will have smaller jaws and a physical appearance markedly different from the normal of today.

Undoubtedly this is due to changes in human food which have taken place in modern times. It was explained at the recent convention of the Dental Society of the State of New York that foods are now softer, more easily swallowed, less gritty and tough. Less chewing is necessary, with the result that there is less strain on the muscles of mastication. Lack of exercise in sufficient doses for these muscles has the tendency toward not only the narrowing of human jaws and overcrowding of teeth but for increasing refinement and beauty of feature.

A fundamental cause leading to jaw shrinkage is the lack of sufficient calcium and phosphorus in the diet of today. These two elements are essential to bone structures, particularly those in the mouth. Calcium forms the basis out of which the teeth are formed. The modern tendency to indulge in such starchy foods as potatoes, pastry and white bread at the expense of green vegetables and fresh fruits is depriving the human blood system of calcium and phosphorus.

Consequently, it is not surprising to learn from a report to the recent dental meeting by Dr. Franklin A. Squires that about 80 per cent of the population today is suffering from some sort of faulty jaw development. Without the proper quantity of calcium and phosphorus the jaw is discouraged in its normal growth.

Diet and the Race.

That there is a direct relation between diet and racial characteristics has long been known. Scientific investigations made in recent years have conclusively demonstrated that a well-balanced diet encourages growth. The experience of the army during the draft showed the remarkable changes created by feeding recruits with a well-balanced, nutritious ration.

The Japanese, in recent years, have been carrying on experiments in their schools with different kinds of food. They have added to the normal Japanese diet articles of food common among the taller races. The interesting result has been that the children so fed have grown several inches more than those fed on the normal Japanese ration.

A change in diet may well account for a difference in physical appearance in the American of today and the American of some generations from now. As a matter of fact, there has been a marked change in the physical type of Americans of a century ago and those of today. The former was inclined to be lean and lanky. His diet was notoriously restricted and ill-balanced. It had little variety. Properly prepared greens were practically unknown, while sweets were considered luxuries to be eaten only on rare and special occasions.

The American of today has grown to be more chubby than his forefathers. This is partly due to changes in occupation. But the main cause is traceable to the many changes in food in the last hundred years.

The rôle of diet in affecting racial characteristics has its promises as well as its dangers. It opens for us, for example, vistas of improvements which it may be possible to make in individual health and well-being by carefully planned diet. Much has already been learned about the part played by diet in illness.

Americans today, together with all other branches of the human family, are still evolving. Anthropologists and biologists are agreed as to that, though not unanimous in their diagnosis of the trend of evolution.

Showing the Protruding Jaw of the Java Ape-Man.

Sir Arthur Keith finds that the effect of evolution on the jaw and mouth is already evident. Sir Arthur, who has examined large numbers of skulls from ancient cemeteries, reports that the skulls of early races very seldom show narrowed jaws and crowded teeth. South Sea Islanders of a few centuries ago had jaws brutish in their massiveness. The famous jaw of the Heidelberg man is much larger than the human jaw of the present day. As the centuries have passed, mankind has become more and more "rabbit-mouthed."

Along with facial changes, the human voice has also become transformed. The coarse, loud voice common a few centuries ago has largely disappeared. Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, curator of the division of physical anthropology of the National Museum in Washington, explains the change as partly due to the narrowing of the mouth, the nasal passages and the jaws. Voices in the future will be softer, more expressive and higher pitched.

Man in the Future.

"Man in future will have a broader and larger head, with the skull and facial bones thinner than now," Dr. Hrdlicka says. "Less use of the jaws and muscles of mastication, due to thoroughly prepared foods, is reducing the teeth, the jaws, the breadth, protrusion and massiveness of the face.

"The face will, it may be expected, proceed slowly in refinement and handsomeness and character—this partly through intensifying intelligence, partly through further reduction of the bony parts consequent upon diminished mastication and partly through the further development of the frontal portion of the skull.

"The eyes will, it is plain, be rather deeper set, the nose prominent, the jaws even more moderate and less regular, the teeth tending to smaller, diminished mostly in number, even less regular than now in eruption and position, and even less resistant."

OUR DEADLY TORNADOES

Thus Far in 1930 They Have Killed 140 People, And the Average Yearly Toll Is 310

EVERY year two countries are visited by a kind of storm which seldom fails to take toll in property and life. These countries are Australia and the United States, and the storm is the short, sudden and vicious tornado.

Between May 1 and May 18 tornadoes killed 120 people in the United States and did millions of dollars' worth of damage. The total tornado death toll in this country this year already has reached 140, and records indicate that before the tornado season ends in July it will have increased. The yearly average is 310 persons killed in 130 of these storms.

Meteorologists have found no fully satisfactory explanation of tornadoes. They know that the huge cup formed by the Rockies on the West and the Appalachians on the east is a sort of cauldron wherein these storms are brewed. They believe that currents of air blowing in opposite directions at the cloud level set up the initial whirl, which extends down to the earth in the form of a tornado.

This is most likely to happen in the southeastern part of a low-pressure area that is elongated in a north-and-south direction, the weather experts have observed. The tornado also will be strengthened by a strong high-pressure area following close behind the low, as the two pressure areas sail across the country from west to east. The cool air of the high level tends to replace warm air lower down, and the movement gains terrific speed once a whirl has formed. From many examples of the damage done, engineers have estimated that the wind must reach a velocity of 300 to 500 miles an hour.

Large Areas Covered.

Tornado conditions sometimes prevail over an area as large as several States and produce within a very few hours a dozen or more tornadoes. An unusually destructive series is found in the Weather Bureau records for 1924. In March there were twelve tornadoes within twenty-two hours; in April, twenty-two within thirty-six hours; in May, eleven within seventeen hours, and in June, four within three hours. Each group killed scores of people and destroyed millions of dollars' worth of property.

The tornado takes the form of a spinning funnel reaching high up into the sky. It travels from twenty-five to forty miles an hour; occasionally it proceeds at a rate as low as ten miles an hour or as high as sixty. A vacuum in its centre causes many astounding phenomena. It can explode a house. It can pick up solid, heavy articles and rain them down at distant places.

Over water it has been known to form "water spouts." Fish have been picked up and rained down over land. Salt, dead birds, hay, oak leaves, pebbles, wheat grains, live frogs and toads, mussels and even an alligator have been picked up to descend elsewhere in a startling deluge. A whirlwind similar to the American twister once picked up two baskets of oranges at Naples and astounded inhabitants of a near-by point with a shower of yellow fruit.

The cotton-growing States and the mid-West are the chief sufferers from tornadoes. In March, 1925, a giant twister swept Missouri, Illinois and Indiana, killing 689 persons, injuring 1,980 and causing an immense amount of damage.

FAST SWEDISH TRAIN.

A NEW fast train in Europe, to operate between Gothenburg and Stockholm, Sweden, will soon be put into service. It will make an average speed of fifty miles an hour, covering the 285 miles between the two cities in five hours and forty-four minutes.

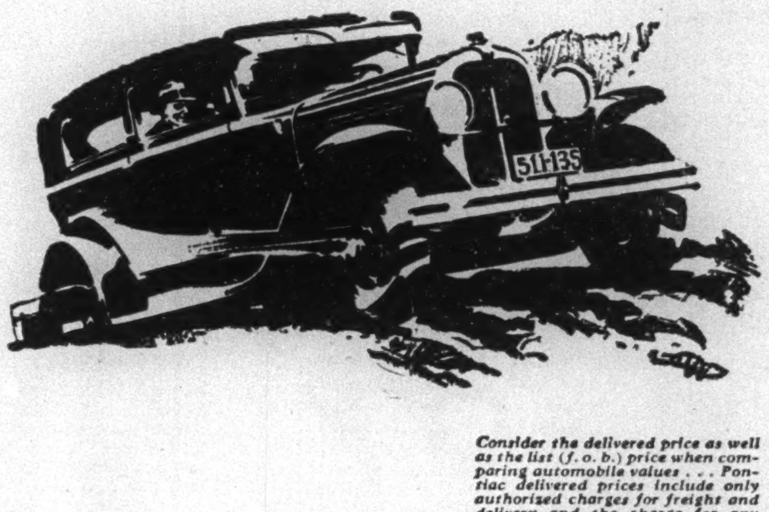
A FAMOUS NAME A FINER CAR

Dependable....
...YES!
because it embodies features which assure unfailing service



The Pontiac Big Six enjoys a worldwide reputation for dependability—because it is built on big car principles and to big car standards of quality.

Its 60-horsepower motor develops maximum power at moderate engine speeds—is never over-taxed, no matter how fast or far you drive. The big main bearings are of the costly interchangeable airplane type. There is definite protection in the full pressure oiling system and crankcase ventilation which prevents dilution of the engine oil. Highly efficient cooling is assured by the cross-flow radiator. And Pontiac internal-expanding brakes are so well designed, so thoroughly weather-proof that they frequently run 30,000 miles before the lining needs replacement.

Comparable standards of quality rule in every other part and detail. You know, when you buy a Pontiac Six, you are buying a dependable car.

Consider the delivered price as well as the list (f. o. b.) price when comparing automobile values . . . Pontiac delivered prices include only authorized charges for freight and delivery and the charge for any additional accessories or financing desired.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ST. ANDREWS, Scotland, May 31.—Bobby Jones has done it and there now are no more fields for him to conquer.

While 20,000 persons stood packed in dense masses around each tee and green, Jones today defeated Roger Wethered in the final round of the British amateur golf championship over thirty-six holes, 7 up and 6 to play.

Thus Bobby has achieved his ambition, winning both the amateur and open championships of his own country and Great Britain. And he has won the British amateur as he had already won the British open—over the greatest links nature and time have evolved, links he loves and understands as if he had been brought up in the place.

Jones is the third American to win the British amateur title, the late Walter J. Travis having been the first to capture that honor in 1904, while Jess Sweetser duplicated the feat in 1926. Jones and Sweetser are native-born Americans, but Travis was born in Australia.

The Climax for Bobby.

However long Bobby lives, however many golfing triumphs still await him, he will never experience a keener rapture than that he felt after he had driven straight to the twelfth green at the end of the match for a distance of 300 yards and realized he was safely in port after his wonderful voyage of golfing adventure.

He completed the match in 118 strokes—two under an average of 4s—and in all its long history, St. Andrews never has known a more remarkable score than that.

But scores cannot tell the whole story of Bobby's amazing achievement today. Figures are cold, unromantic things, and it was the way he played that made victory so impressive.

He played practically every type of shot in the game with equal art whenever and wherever it was called for and established a standard of golf that never has been surpassed. The few slips he made only served to throw into higher relief Bobby's astonishing skill and judgment.

A Model of Perfection.

The Atlantan won because he was master of every department in the game, with a reserve of power ready at his call that had to be seen to be believed. His driving was uniformly straight, his play up to the hole a model of what such play should be, and his putting, if not quite so convincing as usual, never broke down.

Wethered was just as good up to the hole—if anything he was a little better—but off the tees and on the greens he was uncertain, and that was his undoing.

Had Wethered found his touch on the greens he would have tested Jones to the uttermost. But I don't think he could have beaten him.

The weather was fine all week and at its glorious best today. The sun shone brightly and the east wind blew just sufficiently strong to test the players. The enormous gallery, under properly organized direction, behaved as a crowd should and gave the players every chance to produce their best form.

Never in my long golfing experience have I seen such a sight—such serried ranks of thousands streaming along the fairways of the royal and ancient course. It was a crowd made up of all sorts and conditions of men, women and children and one poor baby, whom his father in his excitement was carrying head downward for a time.

Crowds Cheer, Throw Hats Aloft.

When all was over the crowd swarmed around Bobby, cheering, throwing hats in the air and carrying him on their shoulders back to the clubhouse. And if Bobby was happy, there was one woman in the crowd who was even happier. Never has there been a prouder or more justly proud wife than Mrs. Jones, who listened smilingly while the gallery acclaimed her husband the finest golfer in the world.

Here is the story of the first eighteen holes, at the end of which Jones was 4 up. At the first hole Wethered had the advantage, for he was on the green nicely in 2, whereas Jones misjudged his second and was short of the burn. However, he played a fine pitch-and-run to within four feet of the hole, and after Wethered had just failed to run down his putt for a 3, Jones holed his for a 4. That was a half.

The second was halved in 4, but at the third Wethered missed a putt for

TILDEN GAINS FINAL IN FRENCH TENNIS

Puts Out Borotra in Thrilling Match, 2-6, 6-2, 6-4, 4-6 6-3—Cochet Is Victor.

MRS. MOODY WINS, 6-2, 6-1

Defeats Fraulein Aussem in Semi-Finals—Miss Jacobs Upsets Senorita de Alvarez.

By The Associated Press.

AUTEUIL, France, May 31.—America's standard bearers outdid themselves in the French tennis championships today, creating an all-California final for the women's title and landing Big Bill Tilden in the title round against Henri Cochet for the men's singles crown.

Mrs. Helen Wills Moody defeated Fraulein Cecilie Aussem of Germany, 6—2, 6—1, in a match interrupted by rain, and Big Bill Tilden turned back his old rival, Jean Borotra of France, 2—6, 6—2, 6—4, 4—6, 6—3, but the biggest surprise was the smashing victory of Miss Helen Jacobs over Señorita Elia de Alvarez of Spain to the tune of 6—1, 6—0.

Miss Jacobs, for the first time since she came to Europe, gave proof that the American ranking committee made no mistake when it selected her as second only to Mrs. Moody. She overpowered the highly rated Spanish player by strong driving, cunning change of pace and length and a magnificent overhead game that was coupled with unusual agility and speed at covering court.

To Play for Title Today.

Paris fans, leaving the stadium under the spell of Miss Jacobs's splendid effort, were bemoaning the fact that Europe must look to the United States for a woman player capable of giving Mrs. Moody a real battle. These two Berkeley (Cal.) girls will meet at 3 P. M. tomorrow for the title Mrs. Moody has held for the last two years.

The world's champion, in her match with Fraulein Aussem, went at the assignment in her usual businesslike manner, apparently caring no more for the drizzle of rain which fell than for the few winning shots her opponent scored. Both players were drenched and a halt had to be called in the second set, when the rain increased to a downpour.

Mrs. Moody's victory, although not quite as spectacular as that of her California rival, left her still the favorite to win the title in the minds of most of the 10,000 spectators present today.

Tilden again proved that he can generally handle the Bounding Basque, but Cochet maintained his position of favorite for the title by crushing Baron Humbert de Morpurgo of Italy, 7-5, 6-1, 6-2.

Tilden Sticks to His Plan.

Big Bill had mapped out a plan of campaign which he carried through without faltering, even in the face of an interruption by rain, which gave the fast-tiring Basque an opportunity to recuperate.

The American champion played as though glued to the base line and forced Borotra to play the same type of game. The result was that the bounding one had few opportunities to change to the net, where his smashing and volleying talents make him most formidable.

Intent on keeping Borotra at a safe distance, Tilden refused sometimes to take advantage of opportunities for winning strokes if they were the least hazardous. He preferred merely to keep the ball in play. These safe and sane tactics made the match less sensational than some of the previous clashes between these archrivals have been.

Cochet looked decidedly more impressive in eliminating de Morpurgo in straight sets, and the little French wizard is favored to trim the American.

Solves De Morpurgo's Service.

Always a slow starter, Cochet appeared to be experimenting in the first set. He had some difficulty dealing with de Morpurgo's high-bounding first service, but soon found the solution lay in taking the ball on the rise. His lightning returns several times caught the Italian nobleman before he had finished his service contortions.

Cochet's uncanny anticipation baffled de Morpurgo. The Frenchman always seemed to divine the exact

By BRYAN FIELD.

The Withers, one of the East's greatest classics of the turf, was run at Belmont Park yesterday, and Harry Payne Whitney's brown colt Whichone was such an easy winner that he used the race merely as a workout for the Belmont Stakes next Saturday.

By being first at the end of the fifty-fifth running of the mile dash, the son of Chicle and Flying Witch added $26,150 to his score. He continued on for a workout of another quarter mile.

A mile and a half is the Belmont Stakes' distance. Whichone was timed in 2:06 for the mile and a quarter, a very creditable figure considering that the track was far from its best and that Mr. Whitney's horse came to the end of the Withers' mile in only 1:38 1-5.

A crowd of 30,000 persons watched him romp off from his company in the stretch after being pocketed in the early running. Walter J. Salmon's Swinfield, which was rated off the early pace, came from the back of the others to land the place four lengths behind the winner and a length before Starpatic. The W. R. Coe pair of Maya and Black Majesty, which made all the early pace, came next in order, and Sarazen II brought up the rear.

Swinfield Pays 4 to 1.

The prohibitive odds of 1 to 10 were laid against Whichone, while Swinfield was as good as 4 to 1 to place, he being next to the outsider. Starpatic was 3 to 5 to show. All the starters being colts, they carried level weight of 118 pounds.

The Withers spans the link of the Westchester Racing Association with Jerome and Morris parks in Westchester, to the present course, and the result yesterday was the third triumph for the Whitney family. The first sixteen runnings of the race were at Jerome Park and the next fifteen at Morris Park. W. C. Whitney, father of Harry Payne, won there in 1900. In 1905 the race was transferred to Belmont Park and there in 1928 Harry Payne Whitney won with Victorian.

For a time yesterday the odds of 1 to 10 looked like a very poor investment, for when Starter George Cassidy gave the word Whichone was sluggish and was next to last getting off. The Coe pair broke on top and they locked Whichone in on the rail, Black Majesty being in front and Maya on the outside and lapped on him.

Whichone was in the pocket back of Black Majesty. Workman had whipped desperately to rouse Whichone and get him into that pocket, and the slow pace was just fine for the Coe horses, as Whichone could not get clear to show his blazing speed.

Whichone Goes to Front.

But on the far turn Maya slackened a little and Whichone was hard ridden to go up through the opening thus made. He went to the outside of the other Coe horse, paced him for half a dozen strides, and the race was over. Black Majesty folded up and dropped back to fifth place.

From that point on Whichone was running well within himself and he never was pushed, finishing the mile in a gallop and the extra quarter-mile workout the same way.

Whichone adds his name to a long and illustrious line of winners, that of 1916 being James Butler's Spur. Spur has gained fame as a sire as well as a racer and word was received at Belmont yesterday that he had died at Butler's East View Farm on the fourteenth anniversary of his victory.

Thomas Hitchcock, who won the Corinthian Steeplechase Handicap last year with Bangle, repeated, but this time the 5-year-old mare Darkness was his color-bearer. The purse to the winner was $3,350 and Darkness was making her first start since the Saratoga meeting last Summer.

Favorite Is Third.

After being rated well back of the pace for most of the two miles she moved up strongly on the last turn for home and won easily by two lengths from Moholi, with Malvoisine, the favorite, third.

Half a dozen ran in the race, Valorous and Stalker bringing up the rear after Crumpler lost his rider. That put Crumpler out of the race, but he nevertheless had a large effect on the running thereafter, interfering with practically all the others as he dashed along riderless.

In the final rush for the wire this interference became extreme, for he crossed in front of Moholi when that fellow was making his run and looked a winner. After getting clear of Crumpler, Moholi was wide of the course and Darkness had a comparatively easy time to get to the wire first.

Darkness, too, suffered from Crumpler's gay dashes to and fro, but as the trouble occurred in the back stretch the moment was not so crucial and had a less serious effect. While nothing should be taken from the credit of Darkness, the race was

20,000 SEE ROBINS BEATEN BY PHILS

Ebbets Field Crowd Watches Collard Hurl Victory Against Vance.

BISSONETTE HITS HOMER

His Eighth Circuit Drive Fails to Avert Defeat—Brooklyn Keeps Lead in Race.

By ROSCOE McGOWEN.

The rosy calculations of the Robins, their manager and 20,000 fans were upset at Ebbets Field yesterday afternoon by the Phillies, who took the third game of the series, 3 to 1, and in so doing performed the unusual feat of keeping one pitcher in the game without replacing him even with a pinch hitter.

Hap Collard, heretofore filling only a relief rôle, was the Philadelphia hurler who baffled Brooklyn with his sharp curves and change of pace, while his mates were acquiring hits enough off Dazzy Vance and Jim Elliott for their slender margin of victory.

Brooklyn's lone tally was accounted for by Del Bissonette's eighth home run of the season when, in the second inning he lofted the ball over the right-field wall. It marked his sixth consecutive hit, but as there was nobody on base at the moment and the Phils already had gathered two runs in the first inning, the Robins didn't even get into a tie with their opponents.

Vance Fans Seven Batters.

After the opening frame, when a pass to Sherlock, a double to left by Chuck Klein and Whitney's clean single had scored two runs, Vance pitched shut-out ball, showing great speed and control and fanning seven men. But for Klein's double, a pop fly which fell safely near the foul line in left, the Dazzler might have had a shut-out victory. When he retired in the eighth for a pinch hitter, Jim Elliott took up the burden and gave up the other run on a freaky triple by Denny Southern and a sacrifice fly by Thevenow.

The Robins had more than one chance to tie the score, but Collard always appeared to have too much on the ball for Brooklyn's heavy hitters. Brooklyn's greatest opportunity came in the eighth, when Hollis Thurston, batting for Vance, hit a single to right and Jackie Warner, a fast man, was sent in to run for him. But the speed in Warner's legs apparently wasn't matched by speedy thinking, for when Frederick drove a liner against the right-field wall for a single, Warner, despite the fact that Klein obviously had no chance to make a catch, hesitated off second and then was thrown out at third on Friberg's perfect relay of Klein's throw.

Robins Keep League Lead.

This play meant the loss of the ball game, for Babe Herman, next up, slashed a line drive just inside the right field foul line for a double, on which Frederick was able to get only as far as third, and Flowers went out on the last scoring chance by grounding easily to Whitney.

As a final gesture, Eddie Moore lined a double to left in the ninth after two were put out and the crippled Glenn Wright went in to bat for De Berry. Wright, obviously unable to take a firm stance at the

YANKS BEAT RED SOX FOR FOURTH IN ROW

Ruth Contributes Triple and Double as Shawkeymen Continue Streak.

COMBS INJURED AT BAT

Foul Strikes Instep and He Is Aided From Field—Setback Is 14th Straight for Boston.

By JOHN DREBINGER.

With the Yankees determined to climb considerably higher in the world and the Red Sox seemingly bent on sounding depths hitherto unexplored by any major league array, there was really very little discord to the encounter which was staged in the presence of 20,000 at the Yankee Stadium yesterday.

The Yanks won, 5 to 2, and with this triumph the former champions made it three in a row over the Sox and four in a row since arriving at the decision a few days ago that they would launch a new winning streak. As for the Red Sox, it marked their fourteenth consecutive downfall, and, while it is not clear what they expect to find down there, it can be said that unless their supply of oxygen fails them they are easily good for fourteen more.

To add to the impressiveness of the scene, another one of Manager Bob Shawkey's pitchers moved sedately through the nine innings of play. This time it was the lefthanded Eddie Wells who turned the trick and he turned it with scarcely an effort, breezing along smoothly after the Yanks sent him off to a five-run lead in the first two rounds.

There was one untoward incident, however, which marred an otherwise ideal day for Manager Bob. In the eighth inning Earle Combs, who already had helped himself to two sharp singles, swung with the very best intention of collecting one more, but fouled off a ball that cracked him on the instep and the distinguished Earle of Kentucky had to be helped off the field. Later a severe swelling appeared on the foot and an X-ray is to be taken this morning to determine the full extent of the injury.

Russell Lasts Two Innings.

Technically, it was an ill-advised pitching selection taken by Manager Heinie Wagner that brought about the result obtained in the encounter itself. Heinie's first choice was Jack Russell, which proved a bad guess as Jack lasted only two innings, in which he gave the Yanks all of their five runs.

Heinie's second choice was Big Ed Morris, who, over the remainder of the route, allowed the Yanks no runs at all. Such things, of course, will always happen, though with tail-enders they seem to happen more often than with others.

Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig took a couple of playful pokes at Russell in the first inning by way of priming him for the next. The Babe doubled and Lou singled to drive in the first Yankee tally.

This had Russell ready for the big killing in the second. Two passes and a single by Reese filled the bases and a single by Lary scored two. A triple by Ruth then drove in two more. It was all very simple.

Red Sox Bunch Hits.

As for the Red Sox, they slept soundly until the seventh, when Sweeney, Narlesky and Rhyne startled everybody by blasting three

COLUMBIA VARSITY WINS CHILDS CUP

Crosses Length Ahead of Penn to Take Trophy for 3d Year in Row at Philadelphia.

Princeton Lightweights Take Wright Trophy—Yale, Hitherto Undefeated, Trails.

PENN A. C. SETS RECORD

Turns In Time of 6:22 1-5 to Gain Stewards' Cup, Breaking Mark That Had Stood Since 1908.

By ROBERT F. KELLEY.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 31.—To Columbia's varsity, Princeton's 150-pound varsity and Penn Athletic Club's eight went the major shares of the glory in the twenty-sixth annual regatta of the American Rowing Association, which formed the American Henley on the Schuylkill today.

Pounding down the mile and five-sixteenths of the Henley distance, Columbia's varsity, out for the first time since its defeat by Yale, stood off very definitely the gallant challenges of Pennsylvania and Princeton to take the Childs Cup by a margin of a full length. It was the third successive year in which Columbia has won the cup.

Gordon Sikes's Princeton lightweights rowed a beautiful race to take the Joseph Wright Challenge Trophy and the 150-pound championship from Harvard, Penn and Yale in that order, and the Penn A. C., which hopes to make a European trip this Summer, turned a blazing 6:22 1-5 for the distance in winning the Stewards' Cup, leaving Columbia's junior varsity eight lengths behind and breaking a record of 6:25 that had stood unchallenged since 1908.

Great Throng Lines Banks.

A crowd of 20,000 lined the banks and followed the crews along Fairmount Park in automobiles as singles, doubles, fours and eights turned in a full day of racing that was almost always interesting and often brilliant. At least three of the races were full to the brim with thrills, and the lightweight championship was very much of a surprise in its final result.

The Childs Cup race, one of the oldest college middle-distance events, was an added event and Columbia's third race of the season, its last before Poughkeepsie. With almost a full month of idleness, Columbia's oarsmen, stroked by Bill Sanford and rowing in the same order used for their tight race with Yale at Derby, took command from the start and never yielded control to the finish, and a greatly improved Pennsylvania varsity rowed in a backbreaking finish to barely nip Princeton for second place.

Both the Tigers and Penn were better crews today than they have appeared heretofore, and Columbia's victory, while it was clean and decisive, was worked hard for over every foot of the way. It was an impressive piece of work on the part of the Blue and White.

Lightweight Race an Upset.

The result of the lightweight race was a distinct upset, with the Yale crew, undefeated until today, trailing from the beginning to finish last, and Princeton's lightweights, who lost to both Yale and Harvard two weeks ago, rowing a beautiful race to take the championship, with Harvard almost a full length behind. The race completely reversed the results of the morning trials and gave Princeton its first championship lightweight crew in several years.

Pennsylvania trailed at the start, with Harvard and Princeton in front and Yale third. At the first quarter mile Harvard was a nose in front of Princeton and Pennsylvania had moved ahead of Yale by almost a quarter length. Coming to the trolley bridge Pennsylvania had moved to the front and Yale, in the lane alongside, then began steadily to fall back.

Passing under the bridge, Penn had moved out to a lead of a few feet over Princeton, but at the last half mile Princeton went into the lead and stood off another last challenge from Penn and Harvard to win.

The Penn A. C., beautifully stroked by Chet Turner, was in very fine form and flashed down the course all by itself, Columbia's juniors never being able to offer much competition. The record broken was set by the New York Athletic Club and Pennsylvania under better conditions than those that prevailed today.

Freshman Race Produces Struggle.

The freshman race was a fight from the start to the finish with Princeton's undefeated crew, in its stubby "Flying Dutchman" shell, standing off the last, fighting bid of the Navy plebes to come in a bit more than a half length ahead.

But both crews might have trailed Columbia but for a crab that came somewhere in the port side of the New York shell less than a quarter of a mile from the finish. The Blue and White youngsters had been well up in the procession all the way despite the fact that, rowing in the outside course, they had gone wide at the turn.

Then, in the closing dash, they came with a rush that made them look very much like the winners. They had closed in on Princeton for the lead and seemed just about to take command when the break came and they lost two full strokes. Even so, the New York youngsters got together again in time to stand off the Penn boat that had worn itself out mid-way through the race.

None of the crews were widely separated at any part of the course until the finish. All four pounded along together, after Penn had come back to the leaders following its

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 31.—Eleven bases on balls were factors in Yale's 11-to-7 victory over Princeton in the first game of the annual Yale-Princeton series today. Two Yale pitchers gave five passes. The batting and fielding of the rivals was about even.

The game, played before 1,500 spectators, gave Yale second place in the Intercollegiate League, breaking a tie with the University of Pennsylvania. Yale has now won five and lost three league games.

Alert Work by Infield.

Alertness in the infield stifled the Tigers' most impressive batting rally. With the bases filed in the fourth, Captain O'Toole singled to centre, and scored when Wittmer's long fly to left was dropped. Muldaur's infield single and a pass to Swift filled the bases. Vogt's drive sent Wittmer and Muldaur scampering across the plate, but Booth and Beyer noted that Swift had raced from first to third without touching second. The ball was retrieved, Snead to Booth to Beyer and Swift was called out, ending the inning and rally.

The new pair of glasses received by Catcher Hulbert Aldrich just before the game had an effective part in the outcome. They were sent here by special messenger from Fall River. The Yale catcher broke his glasses in a collision at home plate yesterday and was not expected to face Princeton today. Aldrich worked the Princeton twirlers for two passes and hit a home run to deep left in the eighth, scoring Yale's last run. He also caught a faultless game.

Starting Pitchers Retire.

Bowman and Jennison, starting moundsmen, were retired in the sixth. Both were in trouble from the opening inning. Princeton had found Jennison for three runs and Yale had scored four off Bowman.

Snead's batting was the feature of the Yale attack. He made four safeties in five trips to the plate and batetd in three runs.

The victory gave Yale 87 games to Princeton's 56, with one tie in the series, begun in 1868. The game required practically three hours to play.

WISCONSIN NINE WINS TITLE

Captures Big Ten Honors by Defeating Michigan, 1 to 0.

ANN ARBOR, Mich., May 31 (AP).—Wisconsin won the Big Ten baseball championship today by defeating Michigan, 1 to 0. The title is the first undivided baseball leadership for Wisconsin, and this was the first season to find the Badgers at the top since 1912, when they were tied with Illinois for first place.

Illinois was the runner-up this year. In the final standings Wisconsin won nine games and lost one, while Illinois won eight and lost two.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., May 31.—To the great surprise of no one at all, the Far West walked off with its ninth Intercollegiate A. A. A. A. track and field championship in the past ten years at Harvard Stadium today as the powerful stalwarts from the Coast, clad in the flaming red shirts of Southern California, triumphed over Stanford, 44¼ to 36¼, with Harvard delighting a home-town crowd of 25,000 by gaining third place with 23½ points.

But the sun-tanned lads from the Pacific Coast left the majority of the individual titles behind them, as the East turned in some of the most brilliant performances of a gem-studded day in winning eight of the fifteen crowns.

It is true that all the records—and there were three of them and another tied mark—followed the setting sun out to California. All this to the contrary, the achievements of the Atlantic seaboard athletes, although not properly of record stature, took equal rank with some of the Far Western accomplishments.

Remains as Varsity Mark.

What if Harlow Rothert's shot put record of 52 feet ¼ inch of yesterday remained as a new varsity mark; if Ken Churchill of California bettered his javelin throw figures of 207 feet 8½ inches with the almost incredible toss of 212 feet 5 inches; if Eric Krenz of Stanford legitimized his discus throw record of yesterday that had been disallowed because of a favoring wind with one of 160 feet 9¾ inches, and if Frank Wykoff of Southern California again equalled the mark of 0:09 7-10 for the century with a splendid triumph over Eddie Tolan, Michigan's great Negro sprinter, and Hec Dyer of Stanford.

The Far West can point with pride to these, but the East can show a 1:52 4-10 half-mile by Russell Chapman of Bates, the second fastest in the meet's history; a 4:18 8-10 mile by that astounding City College junior, George Bullwinkle; a victory by Bill O'Connor of Columbia over Jim Stewart and Bob Van Osdell, the highly touted Western jumpers, and the fourth fastest quarter-mile in the annals of the association in the 0:48 2-10 success of Charlie Engle of Yale.

The East also can point to the startling conquest of Gene Record of Harvard over the great Jeddy Welsh of Southern California in the 120-yard high hurdles; the vanquishing of eight thirteen-foot pole-vaulters by Oscar Sutermeister of Harvard, and to the gallant two-mile victory of little Joe Hagen of Columbia.

Every track event bristled with the closest and fastest racing that one could possibly expect and every field event bore the stamp of brilliant competition. It is safe to say that not one meet in the long and distinguished history of the I. C. A. A. A. A. could compare with this one for sheer magnificence of achievement.

Stanford Fights Hard.

To add to the general excitement of the program the expected walk-away of Southern California failed to materialize early in the day. At five events Stanford, putting up a bitter battle to retain its thrice-won laurels, was tied with the Trojans at 14 points each. But, as implacable as a steam roller in its onward march, the Los Angeles combination took a 17¾ to 15¼ lead at the completion of the sixth event, the pole vault, and kept adding slowly but surely to its total until it climaxed its day of triumph with a first and second in the 220-yard low hurdles for 9 points that spelled the doom of the Cardinals.

The West deserves the honors it gained with its team triumph and its records, but the boys from the sidewalks of New York can feel well satisfied with their work today. Columbia won two championships and City College one. In addition Captain Sol Furth of N. Y. U. gained a second place in the broad jump; Dave Myers of N. Y. U. a third in the javelin, and Bullwinkle a third in the half, where he did 1:55 2-10 just an hour after his marvelous mile run.

The fifteen championships were

ARMY CHECKS PITT IN DUAL TRACK MEET

Turns Back Panthers by 85 to 41—Lermond Sets Mark for the Half Mile.

THREE FIRSTS FOR BOWEN

Completes Collegiate Career With Victories in 100, 220 and 440—Knoblock Also Scores.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., May 31.—Army defeated Pitt, 85 to 41, in a dual track and field meet at the Stadium today.

George Lermond, brother of Leo, established a new West Point record as well as a new Stadium record in winning the 880-yard run in 1:55 3-10. He lowered the previous mark by better than three seconds.

Pete Bowen, running the last races of his collegiate career, swept to easy victories in the century, the quarter-mile and in the furlong events. Eddie Knoblock, also making his last collegiate appearance, easily took 120-yard high hurdles.

A stiff breeze swept across the Panther Bowl and proved bothersome to the hurdlers and sprinters, although it did not appear to trouble the distance men.

The victory of Army was something of a surprise, as Pitt was believed to be the stronger in both the track and field events.

THE SUMMARIES.

100-Yard Dash—Won by Bowen, Pitt; Moore, Army, second; Harris, Pitt, third. Time—0:09 7-10.

440-Yard Run—Won by Bowen, Pitt; Harris, Pitt, second; Rice, Army, third. Time—0:50.

880-Yard Run—Won by Lermond, Army; Skidmore, Army, second; Yoner, Army, third. Time—1:55 3-10. (New Army record).

120-Yard High Hurdles—Won by Knoblock, Pitt; Luckett, Army, second; Leavenwich, Army, third. Time—0:15 4-10.

Two-Mile Run—Won by Holtzen, Army; Kilpatrick, Army, second; Clark, Army, third. Time—10:10 2-10.

220-Yard Low Hurdles—Won by Knoblock, Pitt; Piper, Army, second; McConnell, Army, third. Time—0:25. (Equals university and track record).

One-Mile Run—Won by Lermond, Army; Skidmore, Army, second; Omear, Army, third. Time—4:31 4-10.

220-Yard Dash—Won by Bowen, Pitt; Moore, Army, second; Harris, Pitt, third. Time—0:22.

440-Yard Relay—Won by Army (Malloy, Moore, Inskeep, Wood); Pitt (Monheim, Harris, Utterback, Bowen), second. Time—0:43 7-10.

High Jump—Won by Utterback, Pitt; R. Moore, Army, second; Luckett, Army, third. Height—5 ft. 11 in.

Shot-Put—Won by Messinger, Army; Crabb, Army, second; Price, Army, third. Distance—41 ft. 9 in.

Broad Jump—Won by Utterback, Pitt; Green, Army, second; E. Moore, Army, third. Distance—22 ft. 5 in.

Discus Throw—Won by King, Army; Duff, Army, second; R. Moore, Army, third. Distance—124 ft. 11½ in.

Javelin Throw—Won by Lankenau, Army; Glattly, Army, second; Knoblock, Pitt, third. Distance—185 ft. 3½ in.

Jolly Wins for Fifth Time In Thousand Guineas Golf Play

LEEDS, England, May 31 (Canadian Press).—Herbert Charles Jolly of Foxgrove today won the thousand guineas golf tournament by defeating Sanderson of Bradford 3 and 1. The victory marked the fifth time that Jolly had won the tournament. In 1923 he defeated the famous Walter Hagen of the United States.

NOTRE DAME BEATS NAVY TRACK TEAM

Overcomes Midshipmen's Lead in Final Event to Capture the Meet, 67 to 59.

ACADEMY MARKS FALL

Baillie Betters Hurdles Records, Kohlhas Raises Pole-Vault Mark, McDonald Breaks Javelin Figures.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., May 31.—The result in the half-mile race, the final contest of today's track and field meet, turned a one-point lead held by the Naval Academy into a 67-to-59 triumph for Notre Dame. At the beginning of the final event the score favored the Navy by 59 to 58, and Briner was counted upon to take first place and win for the midshipmen. However, Briner tripped and fell, fifty yards from the start, and Notre Dame won all three places and the meet.

Mackenzie, Navy, took firsts in the sprints, his 9 8/10 for the hundred yards equaling the Naval Academy record in that event. This race was a fine one, Mackenzie coming from behind in the last five yards. In the 2:20 low hurdles Baillie, Notre Dame, was closely pressed all the way by Coleman and Lloyd of the Navy. Baillie bettered the Naval Academy figure by three-tenths of a second in the low hurdles and five-tenths in the high.

Kohlhas raised the Navy pole vault record to 13 feet, 2⅜ inches better than the high figure he set a week ago. The Navy was also exceeded in the javelin event, the 184 feet 3 inches, tossed by McDonald of the visitors, being 1 foot 4½ inches better than the old record.

THE SUMMARIES.

Track Events.

100-Yard Dash—Won by Mackenzie, Navy; Nichols, Notre Dame, second; McCormick, Notre Dame, third. Time—0:09:8.

Sports of the Times

Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

By JOHN KIERAN.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., May 31.—Harvard had one Record to its credit before the intercollegiate meet started. That was Gene Record, sophomore hurdler and quarter-miler and one of the mainstays of the Crimson varsity track squad. He ran anchor leg on the relay team that set the world's indoor record and ran third leg on the team that scored a surprise victory at the Penn Relays.

Not that it matters, but Dave Myers of N. Y. U. and Mark Tyson of Yale throw the javelin left-handed, and Herb Fleishhacker of Stanford heaves the shot southpaw style.

Football players sighted in the track and field events included Rothert, Fleishhacker and Tandy of Stanford; Schneider, Myers and Jones of N. Y. U.; Record and Kuehn of Harvard; Bromberg of Dartmouth; Hall of Southern California; Hurley of Fordham; Cronin and Fischer of Rutgers; Macaluso, Colgate.

Eddie Tolan, Michigan sprinter and holder of the world's record at 100 yards, wears spectacles while running. Most sprinters crouch for the start with the left foot forward. Tolan crouches with his right foot forward. He digs starting holes as deep as mineshafts and rips them out with the force of his starting kick.

The meet was hardly under way before those Coast lads warmed up to their work. Harlow Rothert, on his second attempt, broke the intercollegiate shot-put record, and Ken Churchill of California whizzed the javelin high over the turf for a new intercollegiate mark.

Out West the report was that Stanford and Southern California athletes were such deadly rivals that they didn't speak when they met or passed, but in Boston they put up at the same hotel and chummed together on the turf inside the Cambridge Stadium.

Charley Engle, the Yale quarter-miler, may have inherited some of the speed of his father, who is head of the city traction lines in Youngstown, Ohio.

The Olympic Touch.

Seven members of our last Olympic team were among the competitors in the intercollegiates here. Reading from left to right they were Jim Stewart and Frank Wykoff of Southern California, Barney Berlinger of Penn, Frederick Weicker and Frank Conner of Yale, and Rothert and Eric Krenz of Stanford.

For the safety of the spectators the hammer-throw and discus competition were held outside the Stadium, but even then a Cambridge policeman was knocked over by a flying discus. With so many competitors on the field, it might be a good idea to hold the javelin event outside the walls before some bystander is speared like a salmon.

Bill Bingham has put in a loud-speaking device for announcing at the Harvard Stadium. It worked well during the track meet, where the fans were comparatively quiet except during stirring finishes on the cinderpath, but it may not work so well with a noisy football crowd in the stands. However, it's worth a trial. Football spectators have as yet had little help in their efforts to keep track of substitutions, or even the starting line-up.

The boys were talking of the sprint race out West in which Hubert Meier of Iowa State ran the hundred in 0:09 4-10. Rothert and Krenz said they saw pictures of the finish and the runners were well bunched at the tape, leading to the thought that the timers may have been a little fast snapping those watches. But Meier must be a fast stepper, considering the fact that he cracked the 60-yard record in the last indoor season.

Rothert and Krenz are rivals and chums at the same time. They compete together and travel the same way.

Time and Expense.

It's too bad there can't be one real intercollegiate meet instead of two, as there are now, with the I. C. A. A. A. A. and then the N. C. A. A. holding separate sets of championships. However, this country is so extensive that it would take a lot of time and money to get all the college stars competing in the same set of games.

Many colleges belong to both athletic governing bodies, but few of them compete in both sets of games. Stanford won the I. C. A. A. A. A. title last year and then finished well up in the N. C. A. A. games with a three-man team composed of Ward Edmonds, Harlow Rothert and Eric Krenz.

Ward Edmonds, in addition to being a fine pole vaulter and hurdler, was good enough at golf to qualify for the national amateur golf championship at Pebble Beach last year.

It was too bad that George Simpson, Claude Bracey and Cy Leland couldn't have been at the Stadium to run the sprints with Dyer, Wykoff and Tolan. But Simpson, Bracey and Leland attended institutions that are not members of the I. C. A. A. A. A.

Perhaps when airplanes are common carriers and travel time is cut down there will be a merging of the groups and one set of games instead of two. But that won't come this year or the next.

Have Brief Workout at New London Base—Eli Squad to Go on Yachting Trip Today.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW LONDON, Conn., May 31.—Yale's varsity crew was sent for the first time downstream over a four-mile course late this afternoon, the junior varsity eight passing the first crew on the last two miles, only to have the varsity go to the front at the finish.

A stiff northwest wind prevailed while the trial was on and blew diagonally across the course.

The second crew started from the boat house shortly before 4 o'clock, Eastern Time, and paddled down to the two-mile mark off the submarine base. A half hour later the varsity crew pulled away from the float, and at 4:23 o'clock Coach Ed Leader signalled from the launch for his charges to start.

Tappen set the stroke at a thirty beat and varied it from twenty-eight to thirty-two all the way to the railroad bridge.

The junior varsity crew, rowing a thirty beat, was slow in picking up the senior boat at the two-mile mark. The varsity boat forged ahead and was about two lengths to the good when the trial ended.

Both varsity crews returned to camp in the launches and the shells were towed upstream.

Fred Spuhn, the freshman coach, also gave the youngsters their first test over a course this evening, the distance being two miles downstream at a twenty-eight stroke. Spuhn said the trial was not for speed and no time was given out. Neither was the time made by the two varsity crews, which was rowed under fast conditions announced.

Tomorrow the Yale squad will go a-yachting. The auxiliary schooner yacht Migrant, owned by Carl Tucker of Mount Kisco, N. Y., will be at their disposal. The oarsmen will have lunch on board and return to camp in time for dinner.

HARVARD'S EIGHTS GOING TO RED TOP

Varsity, Jayvee and Freshman Oarsmen Start for New Headquarters Today.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., May 31.—Harvard's varsity, junior varsity and freshman oarsmen will bid adieu tomorrow to Newell Boat House on the Charles River, where they have been housed for the last three months, and start their annual sojourn to Red Top, Harvard's headquarters on the Thames.

On Monday morning Coach Charles Whiteside will give his first and second varsity eights their first workout on the Connecticut stream in preparation for the races with Yale on June 20. Coach Burt Haines will start drilling his yearling eight on the same day.

Prospects for a Harvard victory in the varsity and jayvee races are not bright. Yale has taken the measure of all of its opponents to date over a two-mile distance, and it has showed all the possibilities of developing into a powerful four-mile boat.

Harvard, on the other hand, after defeating M. I. T. in its opening race, was beaten by both Navy and M. I. T. two weeks later. Last Saturday it was a poor third at Lake Cayuga with Cornell and Syracuse as its opposition. From a comparison of records Yale should be an overwhelming favorite, but four miles is a long stretch of water and anything may happen.

At the start of the season Whiteside assembled eight men and has kept most of them in the varsity shell ever since. His plan was to row them together into a smooth and speedy crew. He found little fault with it while it was winning from Tech in its start, but when it was beaten by both Navy and Tech two weeks after its first victory he started some shifting.

He relegated Stanley Swaim to the jayvee and brought up Charles Hovey from the junior varsity to row at 4 on the varsity. John W. Hallowell, who had been at 4 until taken ill, was put in the first shell, but at 2. The six other oarsmen were the same as at the start of the year.

Up at Ithaca with the new rowing order the varsity was poorer than ever and Whiteside during the first three days of this week experimented with his first boat.

A pair of sophomores, Franz F. Colloredo-Mansfeld and Thomas Page, stroke and bow, respectively, on the varsity shell for all of the races to date have both been replaced. Page has gone down to the second varsity, while Colloredo-Mansfeld is reported as on the disabled list.

In Page's place at bow, Coach Whiteside experimented with Captain Lawrence Dickey during the first two practice sessions of the week, and then he put Dickey at 3 and stationed Harry W. Sturges, only recently promoted from the jayvees, to bow. Thomas Armstrong, who it is believed is being groomed as varsity stroke, has been filling in for Colloredo-Mansfeld. Armstrong until the race last Saturday at Ithaca was on the third varsity, but Whiteside has been watching him right along. Armstrong was the stroke of last year's freshman crew and he did a wonderful job in setting the pace against the great duel with the Yale yearlings.

Armstrong is just six feet tall and weighs close to 190 pounds. At Ithaca he stroked the junior varsity and made a good fight until the final 50 yards, his boat finishing second to Cornell. He will be watched closely during the training session at Red Top.

CRESCENT TWELVE DEFEATS TORONTO

Triumphs Over University Team, 4 to 3, Before 2,000 on Bay Ridge Field.

WINS IN LAST FOUR MINUTES

Hawkins Nets the Winning Goal From Scrimmage After Jablonka Deadlocks Score.

After holding the undefeated Crescent A. C. lacrosse team to a 3 to 3 deadlock on Friday, the Toronto University twelve returned to the Crescent Athletic Field in Bay Ridge yesterday, where it lost, 4 to 3, before a crowd of 2,000. It marked the twenty-first triumph in twenty-three games for the home club.

The teams battled on almost even terms in the first period, which closed with the Crescents leading, 1 to 0, as the result of Frank Jablonka's goal after a pretty pass from Jerry Thralls about midway in the session. In the first two minutes of the second half, Don Douglas scored for the visitors to even the count. Kerr broke the deadlock a few moments later, putting the Canadians ahead, 2 to 1.

After eleven minutes of the second period, Vic Jenkins took a fast pass from Jablonka and tallied, only to have Kerr put the losers in front at 3 to 2, within the next few seconds. In the last seven minutes, Jablonka tallied after a pass from Jenkins to again knot the score and Russell Hawkins netted the winning goal from scrimmage with four minutes of play remaining.

Barry Is Beaten by Phelps For World's Sculling Title

MORTLAKE, England, May 31 (AP).—By the large margin of 35 lengths, a young Londoner, Ted Phelps, wrested the world's professional sculling championship from the holder, Bert Barry, likewise an Englishman, in a race over the Putney-to-Mortlake course of 4¼ miles today.

A son of Bossy Phelps, Putney riverside waterman, who has much to do with the Oxford and Cambridge crews during their annual races, Ted Phelps has won several minor races and recently has been coaching in Argentina. He trained for the last three months at Putney with the assistance of the well known scullers, D. H. L. Gollan, J. Beresford Jr. and T. R. A. Collett.

Phelps forged ahead gradually and led by four lengths at the halfway point, after which it was something of a procession. Phelps's time was 22 minutes 48 seconds.

FIORENZA, N. Y. A. C., TURNS BACK N. Y. U.

Gives Only One Hit and Scores Both of His Team's Runs In 2-0 Triumph.

VIOLET STREAK IS SNAPPED

Shut-Out Is First Received by Losers This Season—Schmotzer Hurls Well.

With George Fiorenza, former Manhattan College twirler, allowing only one hit and scoring both of his team's runs himself, the New York Athletic Club baseball team blanked New York University, 2-0, at Travers Island yesterday, in the closing game of the season for the losing nine. The shut-out was the first to be suffered by the collegians this season.

The defeat snapped a four-game winning streak which the Violet nine had built up as a result of victories over C. C. N. Y., Rutgers, Georgetown and Fordham, and it enabled it to conclude its schedule with a record of fifteen victories and seven defeats.

Gus Schmotzer, who had been undefeated in six games this year, was the starting pitcher for New York University. He twirled excellently during his seven-inning stay on the mound despite the fact that he allowed eleven hits, which he kept well scattered. He was withdrawn in the eighth in favor of a pinch hitter and Follet finished the game.

Fiorenza tallied in the third and fifth frames. In the third, he walked to open the inning and he was sent across on Schepp's double to left and Graham's line single to the same sector. Fiorenza again started the rally in the fifth with a line double to left field and he again counted on Schepp's triple to right centre.

CRESCENT A. C. NINE DEFEATS MONTCLAIR

Takes Initial Game in Eastern Circuit, 4 to 2, Gunzlemen Drives Triple.

The Crescent Athletic Club nine inaugurated its season in the Eastern Athletic Club League with a 4 to 2 victory over the Montclair A. C. on the Crescent diamond in Bay Ridge yesterday. It marked the tenth triumph in eleven starts for the home club.

Wolters of the victors tallied the first run after reaching first on an error in the initial frame. He advanced to second on a fielder's choice and went to third on a sacrifice by Schirling and crossed the plate on an infield error. The Crescents added one run in each of the fourth, sixth and seventh sessions.

A single by MacIntosh, a triple by Gunzelmen and a single by Lange drove in both of the visiting team's runs in the seventh session.

Fordham Baseball Team Bows to Manhattan; Holy Cross Nine Beats Harvard

MANHATTAN VICTOR OVER FORDHAM NINE

Green and White Team Combines Hits and Passes to Score an 8 to 5 Triumph.

CORRIGAN STARS ON MOUND

Yields Only Three Safeties Though Allowing Ten Bases on Balls—Garrison's Triple Helps.

Except for the third inning, when he yielded two hits and three runs, Frank Corrigan, Manhattan College mound ace, pitched effectively and twirled the Green and White nine to an 8–5 triumph over Fordham at Fordham Field yesterday. It was the Maroon team's second defeat in as many days and its second by a metropolitan rival, the losers having bowed on Friday to N. Y. U.

Although he gave ten bases on balls, Corrigan allowed only three hits, all singles, and proved effective at crucial moments. Twice, with only one out, the home team filled thte bases but could send in only a single run. On the other hand, the winners made good use of their hits and took advantage of the walks issued by Frank Foley, who was removed in the eighth inning in favor of Jim Comerford.

Both teams scored in the initial inning. Devaney walked for Manhattan and after Shand had fouled out, O'Neil also walked. Elcewicz threw wild to catch Devaney stealing third and the Green and White player scored. LaBorne opened the Fordham half of the inning by receiving a base on balls and then stole second. LaBorne took third while Neilan was being put out at first and came in when Tony Sabatini lifted a sacrifice fly to right field.

Manhattan Takes the Lead.

The winners took a two-run lead in the next inning. Leonard walked, and after O'Connor had struck out, Garrison tripled to score Leonard and registered the winners' third run on Devaney's single. Fordham rallied in the third inning to take a one-run lead, 4–3. LaBorne and Neilan walked in succession and the former scored on Loehwing's hit. Aube singled to send in Neilan and Loehwing.

Manhattan came back in the fourth with three runs of its own. Garrison was hit by Foley. Corrigan singled, sending Garrison to third. Devaney then hit to score both. Shand drove to LaBorne and Devaney was caught at home, Shand going to second. O'Neil was safe on Comerford's error, and stole second, Shand taking third. Shand started home and was safe when Fisher threw wild to Elcewicz.

Fordham Fights to End.

Fordham made its final run in the sixth and the Green and White added one each in the eighth and ninth. O'Connor singled in the eighth and scored on Devaney's double. In the final inning with Comerford hurling, Shand was safe on Sabatini's wild throw to first and reached second. O'Neil was put out at first, Shand taking third and the latter registered on Keegan's single.

Circuit Blows by Farrell and Dougherty Are Factors—Ticknor Hits Four-Bagger.

Special to The New York Times.

WORCESTER, Mass., May 31.—Holy Cross defeated Harvard this afternoon, 6 to 2, in the first of their annual home-and-home series. Gene Hebert received perfect support and kept the Crimson hits well scattered. Joe Devens fanned eight of the Crusaders, but got ragged support.

Holy Cross got away to a one-run lead in the first. Fisher walked and took second on Dougherty's sacrifice and raced home on Captain Jim Shevlin's single past first base. Tom Farrell's circuit blow to left gave the Crusaders a two-run margin. It was Farrell's third homer of the season. Dougherty hit one to deep right which went for a home run as Bassett fumbled the ball. Ben Ticknor, Harvard's star football centre, put the Crimson in the scoring column when he smashed a homer to centre.

In the fourth, singles of Fisher, Dougherty and Shevlin, with a walk to Marshall, sewed up the game for Holy Cross. Barry Woods drove in Ben Ticknor from first base in the eighth innnig when he made a triple. Nugent's leap in the air to spear Hebert's single in the fifth was the fielding feature of the game.

GEORGETOWN LOSES TO STAMFORD NINE

Kuczo, Former Villanova Hurler, Stars in 8-5 Triumph—Scalzi Honored.

Special to The New York Times.

STAMFORD, Conn., May 31.—The Stamford Baseball Club defeated Georgetown University today, 8 to 5. Johnny Scalzi, second baseman and captain-elect of the Georgetown nine, who resides here, was presented with a traveling bag before the game.

Paul Kuczo, former Villanova pitcher, hurled a fine game for the winners, holding Georgetown to five hits and striking out ten batters. Captain McCarthy of the visitors made three hits, two of which were doubles.

SO. CALIFORNIA TEAM WINS TRACK TITLE

By ARTHUR J. DALEY.

distributed among only eight colleges. Coach Dink Templeton's Stanford troupe took four to two each for Southern California, Yale, Harvard and Columbia. City College, Bates and California gained one apiece.

In a day of superb accomplishments, the one event that caught the fancy of the crowd was Bullwinkle's mile run. It was not so much the fact that he won but the manner in which he did it. His splendid qualifying half-mile of 1:54 7-10 yesterday had partially prepared them for what to expect and when he ran the same kind of reckless race today few believed that he could possibly last until the tape.

Gains in Big Lead.

Thirty yards ahead in the first quarter-mile, still thirty to the fore at the second, and eighteen at the third, the Lavender captain just lasted long enough to defeat Pen Hallowell of Harvard at the worsted. It was a blazing, heart-breaking pace that the willowy little lightweight set for the cream of collegs milers in the early stages of the race. He was clocked in 0:56 4-10 for the first quarter, 2:04 for the half and 3:13 6-10 for the three-quarters.

But so well has Bullwinkle been schooled by Coach Lionel McKenzie in the art of judging pace that he still had the 65-second quarter left for the last lap, time that had been calculated for him far in advance.

It seemed almost unbelievable that a 20-year-old youngster with so frail a body could last out his own killing gait. Joe Hickey of N. Y. U., the defending champion, felt it and failed to place. Bill McKniff of Penn, the indoor titleholder, withered away in the stretch as he and Hallowell made their bid to overtake the fast-fading Bullwinkle.

Hallowell was the strongest at the finish, but even though he passed McKniff his reserve strength had been too much sapped by the early traveling to make proper headway. He gained a bit as he and McKniff had been gaining for a full quarter-mile, but Bullwinkle was out in front to stay and stay he did.

Chapman Moves to Front.

Back came this remarkable young man an hour later in the half and once more he led the way, but only by fifteen yards—not enough with such a hard-working runner as Chapman at his heels. Not a move did the big man from the little college make until the gun sounded the last lap. Then up he moved from fourth to first and steadily he drew away as Dave Cobb of Harvard advanced from sixth to second in the straightaway.

Only the 1:52 2-10 half-mile of Phil Edwards a year ago can take precedence over Chapman's time, figures faster than the former world's and intercollegiate mark that Ted Meredith had made in 1916. And only these same figures of Edwards and similar ones by Meredith have been made outdoors in the United States faster than those of the Bates man today.

No record was made in this event, but one world's record holder failed to break through to a triumph as Tolan, whose 0:09 5-10 century is the new international mark, lost to Wykoff in the hundred and to Dyer in the furlong. Oddly enough, Tolan has not run a winning race this year in major competition.

Wykoff won by a foot and a half in the hundred, with Dyer a scant six inches behind Tolan, and the Cardinal ace slammed through with superlative ease to win by four feet in the furlong in the splendid time of 0:21 3-10.

Coast Jumpers Upset.

Another event that might be classed as something of an upset was the downfall of Jim Stewart and Bob Van Osdell of Southern California in the high jump. Stewart has done 6 feet 5 inches and Van Osdell 6 feet 7¼ inches, not a happy augury for their adversaries in this test. But O'Connor won at 6 feet 3 inches, with Stewart second at 6 feet 2 inches and Van Osdell tied with three other jumpers at 6 feet 1 inch. Stewart came close to tieing O'Connor, but his clearing leap of 6 feet 3 inches was judged a dive and not a legal jump and was discounted.

O'Connor's team-mate, Hagen, won his first outdoor crown after two years of close races with a fighting finish that made up a deficit of almost twenty yards. He broke the tape a sparse two inches in front of Charlie Meisinger of Penn State in the tidy time of 9:26 8-10.

The two Columbia boys came through to championships while on another runway Furth was putting up a game battle to hold onto his slim lead in the broad jump. There was only one alteration in yesterday's positions and that one change cost Furth the title. Arnold West of Stanford went from fourth place, where he had 24 feet 2¼ inches to his credit, to 24 feet 7⅝ inches, just the fraction ahead of Furth's hitherto leading leap of 24 feet 7 inches.

Important changes also were made in discus, javelin and hammer throws. In the first Krenz with his mark of 163 feet 8 inches disallowed because of a favoring wind, scaled the discus on this clear day to 160 feet 9¾ inches for a new standard.

Sets a New Standard.

In the second Churchill, not content with yesterday's record of 207 feet 8½ inches, whipped the spear to a new standard of 212 feet 5 inches and in the third Frank Conner of Yale added to yesterday's hammer throw mark of 176 feet 5 inches a foot and a half, that brought his throw up to the non-record distance of 177 feet 10¾ inches. Churchill's toss equaled the American record set by Jonni Myrra of Finland at Los Angeles in 1925.

Rothert rested on his laurels in the shot and failed to better yesterday's new intercollegiate and American mark of 52 feet ¼ inch, which appears good enough to rest secure in the I. C. A. A. A. A. almanac for many years to come. It took fifty-one years for the college athletes to reach 50 feet and already Krenz has done it three times and Rothert twice.

From 1877 to 1912 not one pole vaulter touched 13 feet and today nine of them did that, Sutermeister of Harvard winning with 13 feet 6 inches as the rest of them tied at an even 13 feet.

Harvard joy was unconfined when the Crimson sophomore won this test and it reached a new high level for the day when Record turned back Welsh with a sparkling 0:14 8-10 performance in the high hurdles. And great was the disappointment of the Cambridge adherents when Record was fifth to the brilliant low hurdles accomplishment of Bill Carls and Ernie Payne of Southern California, Carls winning by inches in 0:23 7-10.

Fine Reception for Engle.

The Harvard supporters also gave a splendid reception to Engle of Yale when the wearer of the Blue ran a front race all the way in the quarter to win in the marvelous time of 0:48 2-10 from Ted Graham of Syracuse, Vic Williams of Southern California, Horace Whitney of Colgate and Bernie McCafferty of Holy Cross.

The fact that McCafferty was fifth is testimony enough of the class of the field. The Holy Cross sophomore was second until the last fifty yards, when Graham and Williams streaked by him, with Whitney overtaking him at the finish line.

MOSCOW, Idaho, May 31.—Washington today won the Pacific Northwest baseball title when a two-game series was called off on account of rain, between Idaho and Washington. Oregon State was the closest rival of Washington, being only a half game behind in the standings. Washington lost 3 games and Oregon State 4.

COLUMBIA VARSITY WINS CHILDS CUP

poor start. Navy, however, fell back coming through the trolley bridge and couldn't quite nip Princeton at the finish.

The day started with the heats in the lightweight class, Pennsylvania beating Princeton in the first one by almost a length and Yale defeated Harvard by nine seconds in the second. These four crews qualified for the final and the defeated ones, Navy in the first and Columbia in the second, dropped out.

After the recess for luncheon, the Penn Athletic Club took the special race for club eights from the Undine Barge Club by about three-quarters of a length.

The West Philadelphia Catholic High took the schoolboy championship, always the feature of schoolboy rowing for this part of the country, from a field of six starters. This school won its second victory in two days, for yesterday it took the Stotesbury Cup, emblematic of the Philadelphia championship. Hun School of Princeton was second after a hard fight with the Ashville School of North Carolina, about a length and a half back of the leaders.

Kenneth Myers, national singles champion, scratched from the Farragut Challenge Cup event, and left the race to Al Vogt of the Penn A. C., who scored pretty easily over Russell Codman of Boston.

Then, after a Penn four, stroked well by Clark Thresher, took the Puritan Challenge Cup from the Penn A. C., Yale's third varsity turned in the prettiest of the earlier races by coming from behind in the last quarter-mile to beat Princeton and Harvard in that order for the event. Yale rated its pace beautifully in this and finished going away after Princeton had led most of the way.

WILLIAMS BEATEN BY COLUMBIA NINE

Lions Triumph in Seven-Inning Twilight Game, 14-8—Bender Effective in Box.

LEAD THROUGHOUT CONTEST

Count Three Times in the Opening Inning—Hewitt Has Perfect Day With Four Hits.

Special to The New York Times.

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass., May 31.—Columbia defeated the Williams nine by 14 to 8 in a seven-inning twilight game today. The late start was made in order not to conflict with college examinations in the afternoon.

The contest was slow and uninteresting, with Columbia always in front. The visitors gained a three-run lead in the first inning and were never headed. Loose fielding and sharp hitting marked the work of both teams.

Lew Bender held Williams well in check, while the Purple used three hurlers in a vain attempt to halt the Lions. Ralph Hewitt hit safely four times out of as many times at bat for Columbia.

PROVIDENCE RALLIES TO BEAT ST. JOHN'S

Three Runs in Eighth Break the Deadlock as Quinton Holds Brooklyn Nine.

Special to The New York Times.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., May 31.—Providence College defeated St. John's College of Brooklyn today, 6 to 4, breaking up the game in the eighth with a three-run rally.

St. John's jumped into the lead in the second by bunching three of the six hits allowed by Quinton during the entire game.

Providence made one run in the first on three hits, including a double by Duffy, and evened the score with single runs in the third and fourth.

In the eighth Providence took the lead when Hinchcliffe's wild throw scored Dion, and Marsella clouted a home run with one on base.

ARMY NINE BEATEN IN PITCHING DUEL

Bucknell Triumphs by 1-0, as Trudenak Wins Mound Test With Coughlin.

SINGLE BY JONES DECIDES

Sends in Dutchak in the Sixth—Losers Collect 5 Hits to 4 for the Victors.

Special to The New York Times.

LEWISBURG, Pa., May 31.—Bucknell defeated the Army nine by 1 to 0 today in the best game of the home season. Dutchak doubled to open Bucknell's half of the sixth inning. Coughlin, Army pitcher, fanned James and retired Shaw on a pop fly. Then Jones singled to centre and Dutchak scored with the only run of the game.

From the opening inning the game developed into a twirling battle between Trudenak, Bison sophomore hurling ace, and Coughlin, Cadet southpaw. Bucknell hit safely four times to Army's five. Coughlin struck out nine to Trudenak's seven.

The game was played on Loomis Field, where Moose McCormick, present Army coach, and the late Christy Mathewson used to star for Bucknell in their college days. It was because of McCormick's close association with Bucknell that the game was played here.

As a token of the esteem in which McCormick is held by the townspeople, Graduate Manager B. W. Griffith presented a gift to him prior to the beginning of the game. The crowd surrounding the outfield necessitated ground rules, which prevented both Farnsworth and Dutchak from hitting homers.

SYRACUSE CHECKED BY PENN STATE NINE

Loses First Home Game in Six Starts by 5-to-2 Count—Diedrich Gets Homer.

Special to The New York Times.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., May 31.—The Syracuse University nine, with an undefeated record in its five home games this season, lost to Penn State, 5 to 2, today.

Halsley, Orange mound ace and the winner of four of the home town battles, was touched for ten hits, including a home run by Diedrich.

Penn State used two moundsmen, Debonis and Stokes, the latter twirled effectively after relieving Debonis. He allowed Syracuse two hits and struck out eight.

R. A. Jones Jr., Martin, Carr and Perkins Advance in Mt. Kisco Golf Tournament

PERKINS ADVANCES IN MT. KISCO GOLF

Ex-British Amateur Champion Among Survivors in First 2 Rounds of Tourney.

R. A. JONES JR. ALSO GAINS

Martin and Carr the Others to Score in Matches Which Prove Exciting.

By WILLIAM D. RICHARDSON.

Special to The New York Times.

MOUNT KISCO, N. Y., May 31.—T. Philip Perkins, former British amateur champion; Leonard Martin of Apawamis, R. A. Jones Jr. of Westchester Hills and Donald Carr of the home club are the survivors of the first two rounds of the Mount Kisco Golf Club's invitation tournament.

Perkins, following a narrow escape from defeat this morning, defeated Max Kaesche, 3 and 1, this afternoon, and tomorrow meets Martin in one of the semifinal matches. Martin, playing close to par figures, won from J. H. Schenck of Merion Cricket, 6 and 5.

Jones found a Trojan in R. W. Woolworth, holder of the amateur record for the course. The former metropolitan junior champion set the pace on the first nine holes. He was leading at the twelfth, where Woolworth missed a short putt, and closed out the match on the sixteenth. Carr held the upper hand practically all the way in his second-round match with Ernie Thomas of Ridgewood.

Perkins Plays Spotty Round.

Perkins played spotty golf against Kaesche. Three up at the fourth, he frittered away his advantage until the match was all square at the turn. Kaesche holed a good putt for a half at the twelfth, which left the match all even, and it was not until the fourteenth that the former British ace began to show his wares. He was home in 2 there for a victory, took three putts on the fifteenth to five for his opponent for an unexpected half, but won the next two holes, Kaesche topping his second shot to the sixteenth and getting into a bunker on the seventeenth.

With the exception of one match, all the first round battles were close. Two of them were more than close. Kaesche, for instance, had to go five extra holes to shake off Johnny Jones, former Princeton star, while Spencer Brainard, a left-handed golfer from Greenwich, carried Carr to the nineteenth before lowering his colors. The only one to have an easy time was Dick Jones, who won the first four holes from Kawasaki, the Japanese golfer.

The match between Kaesche and Jones was extraordinary. With three holes to play, Jones was 3 up. Max took the sixteenth, seventeenth and eighteenth to square and then played five par holes to win.

Martin and Newman were never more than a hole apart in their match, and in the end it was the holing of putts that decided the issue. Don Bomann was 3 up on Ernie Thomas at the turn and lost the next six holes in succession.

Considering the golf he played on the first nine holes, Perkins was fortunate to survive the first round. Despite the fact that he took 45 strokes going out, he was only one down to John Ayling of St. Andrews at the turn. He hit his stride after that, however, and played the next eight holes in two under 4s to beat his opponent, 2 and 1. A par 4 gave the former British amateur champion the tenth hole to square the match and a birdie 2 on the short eleventh put him 1 up.

Makes a Sensational Drive.

Except for a sensational third shot after a poor drive to the sixteenth, Perkins would have lost the hole, but as it turned out it earned a half and he closed the match with a par 3 on the seventeenth, where Ayling's tee shot went over the green.

THE SUMMARIES.

Wright Sails for England; Seeks to Regain Sculls Title

MONTREAL, May 31.—Accompanied by his wife, the former Miss Martha Norelius of swimming championship fame, Joe Wright Jr., former diamond sculls champion, sailed at dawn today on the White Star liner Laurentic for England in an effort to regain his lost laurels. Alderman Joe Wright of Toronto, father of the sculler, and Mrs. Wright Sr. accompanied the young couple.

BOBBY JONES BEATS WETHERED, 7 AND 6

a 4 from four feet after Bobby had holed from two yards. That was 1 up for Jones.

The fourth was well halved in 4, Wethered missing a putt of seven feet for a 3 after a perfect approach that split the pin and bit into the green on pitching. The long fifth was well halved in 4 after both were on the middle of the great expanse of green in 2. Then Wethered got in a shrewd blow, for he put a perfect picture of a run-up eighteen inches from the hole and won it in 3 after Jones failed from twenty feet. That was all square.

Halve Next Three Holes.

The next three holes were halved in 4, 3, 4. At the seventh both nearly holed putts for a 3. At the short eighth Wethered failed from four yards for a 2 and at the ninth hole Wethered came within an ace of holing a long putt after a hooked tee shot, and Jones missed a short putt for a 3 after running up to within four feet of the pin. That was all square at the turn.

Both players were out in 35 and so far it had been any one's match, with Wethered appearing to be the attacker. From that moment, however, and until the end of the match there was only one man in it, and he came from Atlanta, Ga.

At the tenth Bobby opened his shoulders and almost drove to the green, but could not get his 3, and Wethered missed a yard putt for a half in 4. Jones holed a good putt of eight feet to halve the high hole in 3 and then after Wethered just failed to hole a long putt for 3 Jones missed one of three feet for his. Jones was now playing superbly.

He nearly had another 3 at the thirteenth, and won the hole, for Wethered failed to get his 4. That was 2 up for Jones. At the long fourteenth both played fine stopping approaches onto the plateau green, but whereas Wethered failed to hole from eighteen feet, Jones holed from four feet and became 3 up.

Nearly Gets Another 3.

At the fifteenth Jones nearly had another 3, but Wethered migged another short putt. He seemed to be pulling them, and that was another hole to Jones. To the sixteenth—the corner of the dyke—Wethered drove out of bounds and Jones won another hole, but he lost the road hole in 5 to 4, missing a putt of five feet after a fine run-up.

The home hole was halved in 4 after both had played beautiful approaches onto the green. After luncheon it was almost impossible to see anything. Every few minutes trains arrived and disgorged excited crowds, which presently flooded the course. An army of stewards with red flags collected from the club's beaten competitors and students directed through as best they could and at least insured wide rings around the greens.

Wethered Stymies Bobby.

At the nineteenth hole Wethered laid Jones a dead stymie. Bobby tried to loft it but failed. That made Bobby 3 up, but at the twentieth Jones repaid him. His ball stopped on the very lip of the hole. Wethered putted two feet past and then missed the little one back that every-one felt decided the match.

The next three holes were halved in 4, 5, 4, but Wethered got a hole back with another 3 at the twenty-fourth, this time the result of a long putt of ten yards. A stymie robbed Wethered of a half in 4 at the twenty-fifth, and as a result of putting his tee shot into a little pot bunker short of the twenty-sixth green he lost that also and was 5 down.

The next hole was halved in 4, and then Bobby delivered a shattering blow. He repeated his drive of the morning at the 28th, to put his second seven feet from the hole, and then ran down his putt for a 3, with Wethered still six feet away in the same number. That was 6 up and it was now only a question of time before the end would come.

Match Ends at Thirtieth.

It came two holes later, when after the short 29th had been halved—Wethered's putt for a 2 only just missing the hole—he failed at a holeable putt on the 30th green to keep the match alive.

At that hole, Jones gave a final example of his reserve of power, for, as in the morning, he nearly drove the green, a distance of just over 300 yards, and dead straight.

Well, it is all over now and, looking back with cheers for Bobby still ringing in my ears, I am certain the best man won and won greatly.

Bobby Holds Unique Honor.

ST. ANDREWS, Scotland, May 31 (AP).—Bobby Jones today completed his golfing diadem by winning the British amateur championship, which he long has coveted by a convincing victory over Roger Wethered of England, 7 up and 6 to play, in the thirty-six-hole final.

All the jewels of golf now have sparkled from Bobby's crown. He is the only man who has ever won the open and amateur titles of both the United States and Great Britain.

He was presented with the cup on the terrace of the Royal and Ancient Clubhouse this evening, with all the patriarchs of golf gathered there.

Nearly 300 matches have been played this week—all free—for St. Andrews is a public course, and there is no admission fee. Never have the golf-loving Scots had such a good time as they have had watching Jones climb, round by round, over Englishmen, Scotsmen and Americans, including the amateur champions of Great Britain and the United States and the captain of the British Walker Cup team as a final opponent.

Envies Jones's Long Game.

"I didn't drive or putt well today," said Wethered tonight. "Somehow or other I seemed to pull every ball off line, but Bobby Jones is a great golfer who may put any one off his driving. Every one does it, and I had my bad lapse in the morning. But I did not play so badly and would have won from many other golfers. All day Jones drove magnificently, and I envy him his long game and his fine touch on the greens."

"I was lucky to win," was Bobby's comment.

Jones received the cup he wanted most of all from the hands of Colonel P. G. M. Skene, captain of the Royal and Ancient Club, who called attention to the fact that the new champion was an honorary member of the Royal and Ancient.

Bobby, in accepting the trophy, told again of his love for "old St. Andrews."

"I never have been happier to get any cup," he said, adding, "and I never worked so hard, nor suffered so much either."

Jones, with the prized cup, and the party traveling with him were scheduled to leave St. Andrews tonight in a long special train hauling the golfing army back to London.

Mr. and Mrs. Jones and several friends will go to Paris tomorrow for what he says will be "extensive resting and sleeping." The resting and sleeping will be broken only once, when Bobby, with Harrison R. Johnston as a partner, will play a golf match with two French friends.

His plans beyond the Paris visit are not definite, but he said that he might go to Berlin for a few days. He will return to England in time for a few days' practice prior to the British open at Hoylake, beginning June 16.

"Will this success incite you to greater efforts at Hoylake in the open?" Bobby was asked.

"On the contrary," said Bobby decisively. "The way I feel right now, nothing else matters much."

"You mean this was the big shot of the year?" he was asked.

"Exactly," he replied.

"Of course, I'll do my best at Hoylake, and in the American competitions. But this was the big shot. I've always wanted to win it, and some way I felt I never should. I'm very happy and very thankful. I never saw such a great gallery as that one this afternoon."

Far Eastern Olympic Games Championship Won by Japan; 450,000 See Eight-Day Meet

TOKYO, May 31 (AP).—Japan won the allover championship of the Far Eastern Olympic games, which ended today, by a wide margin as the events closed with an interesting battle between three great breast-stroke swimmers.

Tsuruta, Japan, who won the 200-meter breast stroke in the Amsterdam Olympic games in 1928, finished third in that event today, bowing to Ildefonso of the Philippines, who won in 2 minutes 53 2-5 seconds At Amsterdam Ildefonso finished third.

In the 100-meter free-style race, Takaiski, Japan, finished first in 60 4-5 seconds. Takemura, Japan, won the 400-meter free-style event in 5 minutes 2 2-5 seconds.

Attendance at the aquatic meet was relatively high, totaling 35,000 in four days. The total attendance at the eight-day meet exceeded 450,000.

Japan won the track, field, all-round events, baseball, tennis and swimming events. China won the volley ball championship and the Philippines carried off the basketball title. Japan and China tied at soccer.

ATLANTA REJOICES AT IDOL'S VICTORY

Elder Jones, Up Early to Await News of Final Match, Says "I'm Mighty Happy."

NEWSPAPERS ISSUE EXTRAS

Ball, Golf Pro at Bobby's Club, and Ridley, His Links Partner, Express Pleasure.

ATLANTA, Ga., May 31 (AP).—Atlanta, where golfdom has been on edge since the British amateur championship tournament opened, rejoiced today in the victory there of its own Bobby Jones.

Newspapers here issued extras carrying lengthy cable accounts of the detailed play at St. Andrews, and the newsboys were greeted with cheers and ready buyers.

At his home on Peachtree Road, Robert T. Jones, father of the champion, paced the floor since early morning, awaiting telephone calls from friends in downtown newspaper offices. When news of the victory reached the father, he thanked his informer in a voice filled with emotion.

Proud of His Boy.

"I'm mighty happy," he said, "and mighty proud of my boy. That's all I can say." Little Robert Tyre Jones 3d was at the home of his grandfather with his sister, Clara Malone, aged 5, and one year his senior. The children romped with glee when they noticed the joy of their grandparent, himself a golfer of ability and, like his son, a lawyer.

At the elder Jones's office the shouts of legal clerks and stenographers could be heard over the telephone when the word was given that Bobby had won. Mrs. Jones is with Bobby abroad.

Frank Ball, professional at the East Lake Country Club, near where Bobby, as a youngster, lived, and dug a hole in his back yard in which to putt golf balls, was cheered by the news. Ball was out teaching a club member to play when he heard the news. He is a warm friend and a great admirer of Bobby, the club's most famous member.

Bobby's Partner Elated

One of those enthusiastic over Bobby's victory was Chick Ridley, former Georgia State champion, and Jones's regular playing partner at the East Lake club.

Since shortly after dawn Ridley had been in a newspaper office scanning the hole-by-hole accounts of the play at St. Andrews.

"It's an awful time of day to be up," Ridley said, "but Mr. Jones (Bobby's father) told me to come down here and keep him posted by telephone—and then, too, I couldn't sleep anyhow. Gee, I'm glad Bobby won."

During the years that Bobby has been carrying his clubs to various parts of the world to participate in golfing tournaments, Atlanta has grown accustomed to hearing the newsboys shout the word of victory. It was different this time, however, since Bobby had twice failed to win the British amateur, the only major golfing title that he had not won.

Georgia Bar Sends Cable.

NEW BRUNSWICK, Ga., May 31 (AP).—The Georgia Bar Association, in annual session today, sent a cablegram to Bobby Jones congratulating him on his victory at St. Andrews in the British amateur golf tournament.

Bobby is chairman of the Relief committee of the Bar Association.

Announcement of Jones's victory was made to the convention by Logan Bleckley, treasurer, and was greeted with applause. Amid cheers a motion was carried that a cablegram of congratulations be sent.

TUNNEY'S 86 CONQUERS GIMBEL BY 4 STROKES

Retired Heavyweight Champion Out in 42 in Twosome Over Century Links.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., May 31.—Gene Tunney, retired heavyweight champion of the world, and Bernard Gimbel, New York sportsman, engaged in a golf twosome today at the Century Country Club. Tunney was the victor, turning in a score of 86. Gimbel's score was 90. Par for the course is 73.

At the end of the first nine holes the former titleholder had a 42 against Gimbel's 43. Coming in, Tunney scored a 44, while Gimbel's card was 47, giving Tunney an advantage of four strokes on the match.

Upper Manhattan-Bronx P. S. A. L. Title Captured by Theodore Roosevelt Nine

ROOSEVELT VICTOR, WINS CHAMPIONSHIP

Beats Washington, 7-1, to Take Upper Manhattan-Bronx P. S. A. L. Title.

MANHATTAN PREP TRIUMPHS

Conquers Iona Prep, 6-1, and Ties St. Ann's for Lead—Other School Results.

Theodore Roosevelt High School's baseball team captured the Upper Manhattan-Bronx P. S. A. L. championship by defeating the George Washington High nine, 7 to 1, at George Washington High Stadium yesterday. It was the fifth P. S. A. L. triumph in as many starts for Roosevelt.

The victory gave Roosevelt the right to meet Textile, Lower Manhattan-Richmond winner, next Saturday in one of the semi-finals of the city championship competitions.

William Von Bergen was one of the stars of the Roosevelt triumph. He hit two home runs in his four times at bat, one in the second inning with Bob Synnott on base, and the other in the ninth to score Roberts ahead of him.

Synnott, Roosevelt's pitching ace, figured prominently in his team's victory, hurling good ball and being especially effective in the pinches. Synnott also accounted for a double, two singles and a sacrifice in his five trips to the plate.

Meiklejohn, Wisconsin Star, Winner of Conference Medal

The University of Wisconsin athletic council recently selected Donald W. Meiklejohn, '30, to receive the conference medal for proficiency in athletics and scholarship in 1930. Meiklejohn, son of Professor Alexander Meiklejohn, director of the university experimental college, won three major "W"'s in hockey, serving as cocaptain last season, and earned two major letters in tennis, in which he was also cocaptain during the campaign just closed.

The award of the conference medal is based upon both athletic proficiency and academic excellence. Don Meiklejohn's scholastic record is the highest ever attained by a Wisconsin winner of this trophy. He has a grade point average of 2.92 with no mark lower than 93 per cent during his junior and senior years.

GORTON HIGH WINS SCHOLASTIC MEET

Beats New Rochelle, 21½ to 20½, in Qualifying Track Tests for Cornell Games.

RELAY VICTORY DECIDES

McCoy Sets Record in 220, Duffy Betters Mile Mark and Gorton Quartet Sets New Standard.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., May 31.—Three meet records were broken as athletes from eighteen high schools competed in the Section 1 track and field tryouts today at the New Rochelle High School field.

Repeating its victory over New Rochelle last week in the Westchester championship, Gorton triumphed in the point score by the slim margin of 21½ to 20½. Victory in the relay decided.

Individual winners and the Gorton relay team will represent the section in the State meet at Cornell next Saturday.

A record that had stood since 1923 was shattered by Charles McCoy of Pelham in the 220-yard dash. He completed the distance in 0:23 1-5, clipping three-fifths of a second off the former mark, established by Kauzman of New Rochelle.

Howard Duffy of Mount Vernon, who broke the W. I. A. A. record for the mile a week ago at the same track, continued his streak by setting a mark of 4:35 4-5 today.

The third record was set by the Gorton relay team, which smashed its own mark of 1:35 3-5 set last year. The Green and White team of Smith, Munro, Balzer and Long clipped a second off the former mark, turning in a time of 1:34 3-5.

New Rochelle led Gorton in the point score until the final race of the afternoon, the relay. New Rochelle was beaten out for second place by the Newburgh team. Gorton took the trophy cup donated by the Cornell Alumni Association. A plaque was also presented to the winning Gorton relay team by Mayor Walter G. C. Otto of New Rochelle.

Triumphs by 70½ to 55½ to Gain Its First Victory in Dual Meet Since 1922.

KAHN IS DOUBLE WINNER

Takes High and Low Hurdles, While Bonthron Finishes First in Mile and Half-Mile Runs.

Special to The New York Times.

EXETER, N. H., May 31.—For the first time since 1922 Exeter won the annual dual meet from Andover today. The score was 70½ to 55½.

Exeter's superiority was on the track, with two double winners, Albert Kahn taking the high and low hurdles and William Bonthron winning the mile and half-mile runs.

Walter S. Kimball, running for Andover, was first in the 100 and 220 yards, winning from Captain H. Francis Hollister. This was one of the upsets of the meet. Kenneth Brown, C. Pickett and F. Pierce in the pole vault broke the old record of 11 feet 10 inches by going over at an even 12 feet.

The feature race was in the half-mile, when Bonthron, trailing by fifty yards behind Schenck, sprinted and won on the last turn. The Andover all-class club won from the Exeter all-class team, 72 to 45.

GARY (IND.) SCHOOL WINS.

Captures University of Chicago's National Scholastic Meet.

CHICAGO, May 31 (AP).—Ivan Fuqua, Brazil, Indiana's, one man track team made a gallant effort today but could not prevent Froebel High of Gary, Ind., from winning the University of Chicago's national interscholastic track and field meet for the second successive year.

Fuqua, winning two events and placing second in another, amassed 28 points and with some help from his teammates brought the total to 40, but the powerful, well balanced group from Gary collected 53 points to retain the title.

Oak Park was third with 29 points, and Kokomo, Ind., scored 24 for fourth place, Mason City, Iowa; Atwood, Ill., and Pittsburgh, Kan., were tied for the next position with 18 points.

Nine records were broken by the field of around 300 youthful athletes.

CHRYSLER MOTORS PRODUCT

THE FINER

DE SOTO SIX

A BEST-SELLER FOR 22 MONTHS -NOW IMPROVED, LOWER IN PRICE

Six-cylinder automobile value reaches its 1930 peak in the finer De Soto Six—an even better car at a lower price than that famous De Soto Six which broke all sales records for a first-year car—and spread its huge success over 22 months without a single change in design, engineering or price. ¶ To improve a record-breaking car—to make a beautiful car more beautiful, a smart car smarter, a luxurious car more luxurious—and at the same time lower the price—that is real accomplishment. ¶ The improved De Soto Six has a new Steelweld* body which Chrysler Motors engineers believe to be the last word in body silence, strength and smartness, and a big advance in comfort and safety. ¶ The improved De Soto Six engine is bigger and more powerful—incredibly smooth and quiet—resulting in an even swifter and more thrilling performance. ¶ A record-breaking car, a best seller, a favorite for 22 months is now an even better car at a lower price.

Giants Lose to Braves, 3-2; Athletics Win and Tie Senators for League Lead

BRAVES TURN BACK GIANTS IN NINTH

Allen Leads Off With Homer and O'Farrell Triples, but Last-Inning Rally Fails.

MITCHELL YIELDS 7 HITS

Hurls Strong Game, but Weak Support Is Costly—Smith Effective for Boston.

By WILLIAM E. BRANDT.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, May 31.—The Giants resorted to last-ditch tactics in their desperate efforts to break the losing habit today, but their sudden and violent swings in the ninth inning were too few and they lost, 3 to 2, their third defeat of the series and their fourth straight.

Their bats, subdued for eight innings under the spell of Bob Smith's speed and control, suddenly began booming. Ethan Allen, first up in the ninth, floated a high homer into the left-field bleachers, the first of his Giant career.

O'Farrell lined a triple to the fence in right centre and Roettger aimed for the same spot, but his attempt drifted too high and was captured by Clark before it dropped to earth. O'Farrell scored after the catch.

12,000 Watch Contest.

One more run was needed, but Bancroft and Pinch Hitter Hogan sent 12,000 appreciative Bostonians home happy by bouncing a pair of infield grounders.

The Giants' attack was so dormant in the earlier innings that until the seventh they had not pushed a base runner as far as second. Four singles, each isolated in its own special inning, represented their hitting achievements.

O'Farrell, who doubled with two out in the seventh, was the first Giant to reach second safely. He went no further. In the eighth, singles by Leslie and Leach were bunched, but no Giant passed the midway bag until Allen sounded the rally keynote with his ninth-inning homer.

Clarence Mitchell, starting his first game as a Giant moundsman, pitched well enough to win almost any day. The southpaw allowed seven hits, but weak support deprived him of shut-out laurels.

Lindstrom Retires in Third.

Lindstrom tried to resume his regular status in the line-up but gave way to Reese in the fourth. In the third Lindy made a wild throw to first after scooping up Clark's easy grounder. The ball rolled away from Terry and Clark reached third scoring a moment later on an infield out.

Allen went back too late for Spohrer's drive opening the Boston fourth and the ball fell safe for a double. Reese's fumble of Maguire's roller put Spohrer on third, then Smith drove a hit through Terry and Clark singled to right, each hit driving home a run.

Francis Healy, catcher, was released to Bridgeport on option today, due to an injury to Veltman, also a Giant farm hand under Bridgeport silks.

REDS ARE OUTHIT, BUT BEAT PIRATES

Triumph in Final Game of Series Despite Pittsburgh's Superior Batting.

RIXEY KEEPS BLOWS SPREAD

This, Coupled With Losers' Errors, Decides Game—Cuccinello's Fielding Feature of Contest.

PITTSBURGH, May 31 (AP).—Rixey allowed Pittsburgh more hits than his teammates gathered off the Pirate pitchers today, but nevertheless won his ball game, the Reds whipping Pittsburgh, 10 to 4, in the last game of their current series.

Only Rixey's knack of keeping the hits gathered off him scattered, coupled with poor fielding by the Pirates, kept the score from being altered in Pittsburgh's favor. At that, Rixey was benched in the seventh and Kolp finished.

Cuccinello's fielding and batting featured for Cincinnati.

MELILLO STEALS HOME FOR BROWNS' VICTORY

Scores in Ninth to Give Mates Margin Over White Sox—Crowder Wins in Box.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, May 31.—Staging a ninth-inning rally, the Browns scored two runs to defeat the White Sox, 3 to 2, today, Crowder winning a mound duel from Red Faber, each allowing five hits.

The game ended with Melillo stealing home after a base on balls, Schulte's single and McNeely's double had tied the score. Chicago's five hits included a home run by Harris.

ATHLETICS IN TIE FOR LEAGUE LEAD

Win Third Straight From the Senators and Deadlock for First Place.

FOXX HITS 11TH HOME RUN

His Drive in Second Opens Rally That Overcomes Washington—Walberg Is Effective.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 31.—The Athletics took their third straight game from Washington today and moved into a tie for first place with the Senators in the American League race. The Athletics won by 7 to 3.

Lloyd Brown, Washington rookie pitcher, who was on the hill for the Senators, clipped one of Rube Walberg's pitches for a double in the second inning, scoring Bluege and Cronin and giving Washington the lead.

In the last half of the inning Jimmy Foxx opened with his eleventh homer of the season. Miller and McNair singled and Schang doubled, scoring Miller and McNair. Harris then walked and Haas singled, scoring Schang.

The Athletics scored three more runs, two in the fifth and one in the eighth, on hits by Haas, Williams and a base on balls to Foxx. After the fourth inning Washington could not reach Walberg.

Special to The New York Times.

READING, Pa., May 31.—Lon Werneke curved Reading to a 6 to 2 victory over Newark today in inaugurating a three-game series. Opportune hitting in the sixth coupled with Carl Fischer's wildness in walking three consecutive batters netted the Keystone's four runs.

Fine catches by Whitman and Padgett with men on bases helped Werneke.

BROWN OF INDIANS CHECKS THE TIGERS

Allows Only 6 Scattered Hits After Uncertain Start in First Inning.

VICTORS GET 7 SAFETIES

Reach Wyatt and Herring at Opportune Times—Errors and Passes Contribute to Scoring.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, May 31.—The Cleveland Indians got one of the two games they lost to the Detroit Tigers yesterday back today when they annexed the third contest of the series by a score of 7 to 4.

After getting away to an uncertain start, the Tigers getting two runs on four hits in the first inning, Clint Brown settled down and turned in another of his good pitching exhibitions. The rookie right-hander gave Detroit only six hits during the remainder of the game and allowed no more than one in any inning.

The Indians touched Wyatt, who pitched the first three innings, and Art Herring, who toiled the last five, for only seven hits, but they wasted only one of them and, in addition, made good use of three Detroit errors and a couple of passes to help in their scoring.

plate, took three vain swings at Collard's deliveries and limped back to the dugout as the crowd swarmed onto the field.

The defeat still leaves the Robins in first place though the margin is a slender one.

Adolfo Luque and Lester Sweetland will be the opposing pitchers this afternoon.

Injuries and illness have not missed the Brooklyn squad. Rube Bressler has a bad leg and Harvey Hendrick is a victim of rhematism.

Hal Lee, recruit outfielder, is likely to be sent out on option soon, as the Brooklyn club is said to be negotiating for the purchase of a heavy-hitting outfielder from the Sacramento club.

JERSEY CITY STOPS BALTIMORE STREAK

Makes 14 Hits, Including Home Run, Triple and 4 Doubles to Win Series Opener.

WERA GETS CIRCUIT DRIVE

McGowan and Hauser Also Make Homers—Rhodes Relieves Hopkins on Mound.

Jersey City battered three Baltimore pitchers for fourteen hits, including four doubles, one triple and a home-run, to take the opening game of the series from the Orioles at West Side Park, Jersey City, yesterday, 9 to 6. The defeat checked Baltimore's seven-game winning streak.

Wera hit a homer with one on base in the sixth inning to climax a five-run Jersey City rally. McGowan and Hauser hit circuit clouts for Baltimore. Jersey City used two pitchers, Jack Hopkins and Daisty Rhodes, the former receiving credit for the victory. He was taken out for a pinch hitter in the sixth.

CUBS RALLY IN 9TH AND UPSET CARDS

Trailing by 2 Runs, Champions Unleash Attack That Records Victory.

CUYLER'S HIT TIES SCORE

Wilson Singles in Winning Tally—Hornsby, on Crutches, Receives Most Valuable Player Award.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 31.—After two were out in the ninth the Cubs rallied today and made a sweep of the three-game series with the Cardinals. The score was 6 to 5.

Going into the ninth the champions were trailing the St. Louis team by 5 to 3. After two men had been retired Tolson batted for Osborn and singled. Blair hit to Farrell, who missed the play. Jess Haines walked English, filling the bases.

Cuyler then singled between Bottomley and Frisch to drive home Dan Taylor, who ran for Tolson, and Blair. This tied the count. Hack Wilson cracked the first pitch for a single to centre, scoring English with the deciding run.

Before the game Rogers Hornsby, who suffered a broken ankle yesterday, hobbled to the plate on crutches to receive $1,000 as a reward for being named the league's most valuable player last season. The presentation was made by John Heydler, league president.

TORONTO WINS IN SEVENTH.

Late Four-Run Rally Overcomes Buffalo's Early Lead.

Special to The New York Times.

TORONTO, May 31.—A seventh-inning rally which scored 4 runs overcame Buffalo's early lead today and enabled the Leafs to beat the Bisons, 7 to 2. Frank Barnes, Toronto southpaw, held the visitors in check after a bad start. John Wilson was driven from the mound in the eighth after pitching effectively during six innings for Buffalo.

Doeg Defeats Mangin and Van Ryn Downs Pare to Reach Orange Tennis Final

VAN RYN TOPS PARE IN FIVE-SET MATCH

Triumphs by 6-4, 6-4, 3-6, 2-6, 6-2 to Gain Final of Orange Tennis Play.

DOEG PRESSED BY MANGIN

His Service Decides Struggle of Two and a Half Hours by 7-9, 6-3, 6-8, 6-0, 6-4.

By ALLISON DANZIG.

Special to The New York Times.

SOUTH ORANGE, N. J., May 31.—The two members of the American Davis Cup team in the invitation tournament of the Orange Lawn Tennis Club proved their superiority over the rest of the field by reaching the final round today, but it took each of them the maximum number of sets to come through their penultimate tests.

With another gallery of 2,000 spectators in the stands, John Van Ryn of East Orange turned back the brilliant challenge of Emmett Pare of Chicago at 6—4, 6—4, 3—6, 2—6, 6—2, and John Doeg of Santa Monica, Cal., was forced to overcome a deficit of two sets to one to gain the verdict over Gregory Mangin of Newark, substitute on the team. The matchless service of the strapping Californian was the deciding factor in this two-and-a-half-hour struggle, which ended at 7—9, 6—3, 6—8, 6—0, 6—4.

Sparkling Rallies Feature.

Of the two semi-finals today decidedly the more interesting was that between Pare and Van Ryn. The Doeg-Mangin engagement was largely a duel of services in which there was lacking the continuity of sparkling rallies of sustained driving and volleying that marked the other.

Doeg's delivery has seldom stood him in such good stead as it did today and it was fortunate for him that it did, for he was sadly wanting in his return of service, while Mangin not only was serving himself in brilliant fashion but was scoring regularly on beautifully executed drop volleys and knifing through narrow openings with stunning backhand drives.

The sets that Doeg lost found him deficient in his return of service. In those that he won his improved fortune was to be attributed to his correction of this fault, and in none more so than in the fourth, which found him picking off the openings like clockwork as Mangin sought to reach the net behind his cannonball service.

Doeg Loses the First Set.

The Californian dropped the opening set after being within a point of winning it in the fourteenth game, a point that he deliberately threw away to offset a decision on the lines questioned by Mangin. After equalizing in the second chapter he broke through for a 4-3 lead in the third, only to lose his own game in the eighth and eventually the set in the fourteenth game, on which Mangin was four times at set-point.

Mangin, leaving the courts with a lead of two sets to one, came back cold from the showers and never got started in the fourth, which found Doeg playing his finest tennis of the match. In the final chapter the Californian broke through in the first game and had only to hold his own service games to capitalize his advantage. Mangin picked up noticeably in this set, but in spite of his valiant work at the net and his many recoveries he was unable to break through the battering service of the other and capitulated.

The match between Van Ryn and Pare was a stirring battle between two beautifully matched players whose games offered a close parallel.

On both sides there was the acme of good form in stroke production, with Pare's forehand showing to a little better advantage than Van Ryn's, and the Jersey youth's backhand work standing out the more vividly of the two. There was net play of the most spectacular kind, featured by Van Ryn's marvelous back-hand volleys and an exhibition of model lobbing by the Chicagoan.

Pare's Lobs Are Brilliant.

The only department of the game in which Van Ryn failed to come up to his best form was in his overhead smashing and that was due to the excellence of Pare's lobs, which were of just the right depth. It was these lobs, combined with his drop shots and service, that enabled Pare to stem the tide after he had lost the first two desperately fought sets.

Winning the third chapter, the Chicagoan played Van Ryn off his feet in the fourth. Laying his drives on the base line and running the Jersey youth to the corners with his volleys, it looked serious for Van Ryn as the match turned into the final set, for nothing that he could do availed against the brilliant shot-making of his aggressive opponent.

When Pare broke through for a 2-0 lead, the outlook was even more precarious, but at this point the young Davis Cup ace showed his mettle by lifting his game to its greatest heights of the match and blazed away in irresistible fashion. Pare, his guns spiked at both the net and at long range, dropped six games in a row and the struggle was over.

Czechoslovak Team Leads Holland in Davis Cup Play

SCHEVENINGEN, Holland, May 31 (AP).—Jan Kozeluh, brother of Karl Kozeluh, and Roderich Menzel of Czechoslovakia gave their country a 2-to-1 lead over Holland in the third round of Davis Cup tennis competition today by winning the doubles match. They defeated Hans Timmer and A. Diemer Kool of Holland, 7—9, 6—2, 6—1, 3—6, 6—4.

Yesterday's singles matches had been divided.

LEWIS, EINSMANN GAIN TENNIS FINAL

Triumph in Brooklyn Title Tournament and Will Play for Championship Today.

AYDELOTTE-CUTLER SCORE

Advance in the Doubles Along With the Combination of Burns and MacGuffin.

Richard Lewis of Richmond County and Bill Einsmann of Kings will meet today for the Brooklyn tennis championship at the Terrace Club. Both scored fine victories in their semi-final round matches yesterday, with Einsmann scoring over Melville Brill 6—4, 6—4, 2—6, 2—6, 6—2, and Lewis winning over Russell Phillips, 2—6, 6—2, 6—1, 6—4

In the doubles, Edward Burns Jr. and Harold MacGuffin of Philadelphia entered the final round along with William Aydelotte and Merritt Cutler. The Burns-MacGuffin combination defeated Travers Le Gros and Reginald Talmadge, 6—1, 6—3, while Aydelotte and Cutler defeated Russell Phillips and his brother George, 6—3, 12—10.

Brill's brilliant march through the tourney in which he accounted for Percy Kynaston, twice winner of the championship, came to a close against Einsmann, boys' national titleholder of a decade ago. In each set, Brill started well only to give way each time to a stronger and steadier opponent.

After dropping the initial chapter, Richard Lewis rounded into his game and ran off the remaining three sets to win his match over Phillips.

Neither Lewis nor Einsmann has won a leg on the club's challenge trophy, which has been in competition for twelve years. Kynaston is the lone two-title man, lacking but one victory to retire the cup.

The summaries:

Singles.

Semi-Final Round—Richard Lewis defeated Russell Phillips, 2—6, 6—2, 6—1, 6—4; William Einsmann defeated Melville Brill, 6—4, 6—4, 2—6, 2—6, 6—2.

Doubles.

Quarter-Final Round—Harold MacGuffin and Edward Burns Jr. defeated J. Leary and W. Redfield, 6—3, 6—3.

Semi-Final Round—Burns and MacGuffin defeated Travers Le Gros and Reginald Talmadge, 6—1, 6—3; William Aydelotte and Merritt Cutler defeated R. and G. Phillips, 6—2, 12—10.

MISS TAUBELE WINS SEMI-FINAL MATCH

Beats Miss Surber, 6-2, 8-6, in Eastern Clay Court Play at Montclair A. C.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., May 31.—Miss Norma Taubele of New York and Miss Carolyn Roberts of New Rochelle won the Eastern clay courts doubles championship before a large gallery at the Montclair Athletic Club today. They defeated the first seeded team of Miss Alice Francis, Orange, N. J., and Mrs. Fred M. Letson, New York, by scores of 1—6, 6—4, 6—4.

Miss Taubele also reached the final round in the women's singles by defeating Miss Grace Surber, Jackson Heights, L. I., 6—2, 8—6.

Semi-final round matches were played in mixed doubles with Miss Francis and Harry Wolf, national squash tennis champion, defeating Mrs. Letson and Frank Bonneau, 6—2, 6—3, and Miss Clara Greenspan and Sydney Adelstein conquering Mrs. Franklyn C. Koss, East Orange, and Lemoine Heuser, Newark, 6—2, 7—5.

Miss Taubele's tennis throughout the day was of high order. In the singles match with Miss Surber she was extended on numerous occasions, especially in the second set, where she triumphed after trailing at 6—5.

The finals tomorrow afternoon will start at 2:30 o'clock.

The summaries:

Women's Singles.

ANDERSON SCORES AT JAMAICA TRAPS

Gains High Scratch Trophy After a Shoot-Off—Walsh Wins at Mineola.

C. L. Anderson and L. G. Moffatt tied for the High Scratch Cup at the Jamaica Bay traps of the Bergen Beach Gun Club yesterday. Each finished with a card of 92 out of a possible 100 targets. Anderson won the shootoff by 24 to 22 out of a possible 25 targets. The High Handicap Cup went to E. L. Rowland, the only gunner to have a full card of 100 targets. The second cup was taken by J. K. Vorhees who had 98

The scores:

	H.	H.	T.		H.	H.	T.
Rowland	90	12	100	Fruedman	74	16	90
Anderson	92	6	98	Schad	77	13	90

Regardless of a high wind that made the conditions difficult, J. E. Walsh did some excellent shooting at the Mineola traps of the Nassau Trapshooting Club yesterday. He was the winner of the High Scratch Cup, breaking 99 out of a possible 100 targets. The second cup went to F. Gerriets, who finished with 90. With Walsh out of the handicap shoot, the trophy was taken by J. L. Meyer, who also finished with a full card of 100 targets.

The scores:

Mass. Aggies Win on Track.

Special to The New York Times.

HARTFORD, Conn., May 31.—Sweeping two events, the Massachusetts Aggies' track team defeated Trinity today, 67 to 59. Captain Nye of Trinity equalled the college record of 10.2 seconds in the 100-yard dash.

When Life is at Stake!

The Mark of Quality

FOR ten consecutive years all the winning cars in that classic of automobile racing, the Indianapolis 500 Mile Endurance race, flashed across the finish line on Firestone Tires.

IN FACT every famous driver in these races used Firestone Tires. Every one of them for years has refused to use any other and the reasons behind their choice tell a story of Firestone Leadership.

Leadership

Firestone brought out for automobile use:

—The first straight-side tire.

—The first rubber non-skid tread.

—The first commercial demountable rim.

—The first patented Gum-Dipping process.

—The first balloon tire.

Performance

Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires;

—hold all world's records on road and track for safety, mileage, speed and endurance.

—for ten consecutive years have won the 500 mile Indianapolis Endurance Race.

—were on winning cars in Pike's Peak Race—where a slip meant death.

—were on the Studebaker car which on a board track at Atlantic City in 1928 went 30,000 miles in 26,326 minutes.

—ran 71,351 miles on a Detroit taxicab, before the first tire was replaced.

—were on the G. M. C. truck carrying a two-ton load that hung up the Coast-to-Coast endurance record.

—for 10 years have been sold on a mileage cost basis to taxicab and bus lines in greater volume than any other tires, and now equip the world's largest taxicab fleet and the world's longest bus line.

THE Indianapolis Race requires the most expert driving in the world. It is won or lost on the turns. The man who can make the turns at the highest speed is the man who wins. The track is of rough brick and bumpy. As the race progresses, it becomes soaked with oil and very slippery.

DOWN the straightaways the cars pound at sometimes 150 miles an hour, but as the turn comes the driver must judge how much speed he can preserve and how much skid he can take and still stay in the land of the living. This judgment must stay with him through 500 miles—with changing track conditions, with nerves gone, with hands and body numb and with eyes blinded.

THESE men flirt with death, but there is one chance they will not take. They will not take a chance with tires.

THESE drivers buy Firestone Tires. Their tires are not given to them by Firestone, much less are they paid to use them. And herein is the story.

MANY years ago, Firestone did pay drivers to race. The most famous of these drivers was Barney Oldfield and he painted on his car: "Firestone Tires Are My Only Life Insurance."

IN THE course of time Firestone withdrew from racing and the making of racing tires. Then the trouble began. The leading drivers of the country said that it was Mr. Firestone's business whether or not he paid them to use his tires, but it was their business to judge the risks they would take. They would race on Firestone Tires, no matter what they cost, or they would not race at all. And so Firestone had again to make racing tires.

THE difference between a Firestone racing tire and the Firestone Tire you can buy from your dealer lies only in the tread. The heat generated in a tire during a race is terrific. It is heat that causes most tires to fail. The ordinary road tread will burn up on a track, and so for it Firestone substitutes a harder, lighter tread which would be exceedingly uncomfortable on the road but which perfectly answers the track requirements.

THAT, however, is only a detail. The reason why Firestone Tires stand up in any race is to be found in their construction—the same construction that you get in any Firestone Tire.

IN ALL tires other than Firestone, the cotton cords which go to make up the carcass of the tire are merely imbedded in rubber. In the complex twisting and pulling of these cords in a tire in action, the fibers in the cords rub against one another. The friction generates heat and when the heat reaches a certain point the tire collapses.

IN THE Firestone Tire, each of the millions of fine cotton fibers going to make up a cord is thoroughly insulated with rubber in the famous, patented Gum-Dipping process which is exclusive with Firestone. This reduces the friction in the cords and therefore reduces the heat and enables the Firestone Tire to perform normally under conditions where any other tire would collapse.

NO racing car can be better than its tires. Neither can any other car. The racing drivers trust life and victory to Firestone Leadership. That same leadership is available to you at all Firestone Dealers.

ALCIBIADES VICTOR IN KENTUCKY OAKS

Earns $9,760 for H. P. Headley Stable by Defeating Rich Widow by Length.

RETURNS $14.58 FOR $2

Galaday Finishes Third After Setting Pace in Closing Feature at Churchill Downs.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 31 (AP).—The fifty-sixth running of the Kentucky Oaks, a $10,000 allowance affair for 3-year-old fillies over the mile and an eighth distance, was the feature of the concluding program of the nineteen days of racing at Churchill Downs today. There will be a hiatus in Kentucky racing until Latonia opens on June 28.

Alcibiades, a 3-year-old chestnut filly by Supremus—Regal Roman, from H. P. Headley's stable, was first under the wire, followed by J. W. Parrish's Rich Widow, with R. S. Clark's Galady third. The time was 1:52 3-5. Seven fillies accepted the issue.

The Oaks carried a net value of $9,760 to the winner, $2,000 to second, $1,000 to third and $220 to fourth. Alcibiades enriched her backers at $14.58 for a $2 mutuel.

Under a clever ride by Jockey R. Finnerty, Alcibiades was taken into the lead on the first turn, relinquished command to Galady on the turn into the homestretch, but responded well when called upon through the drive and was up to win by a length.

Rich Widow, away slowly, was hustled into fourth position and continuing evenly under H. Fisher just managed to nose out Galady for the place. The latter after forcing the pace to the far turn was sent into the lead under urging and faltered in the final drive, lasting to take only third money by half a length from Honey Locust.

Thistle Ann, Elizabeth Kennedy and Niato finished in the order named.

HELLMAN WINNER IN CHESS.

Beats Beyer, 2-1, for Third Place in High School League.

Gabriel M. Hellman of Evander Childs yesterday defeated Harold Beyer of Jamaica by 2 to 1 in their supplementary match to decide the tie between them for third and fourth places in the annual individual championship tournament of the Interborough High School Chess League at the rooms of the Marshall Chess Club.

As a result of this encounter, in which Hellman won the first and third games and Beyer the second, Hellman won third prize, a gold medal, and Beyer finished fourth, entitling him to a silver medal. This tournament was won by Robert Levenstein of Brooklyn Boys High, with Joseph Richman of George Washington, second.

*Gentleman rider. aAdded starter. †Lost rider.

Darkness was rated far back in the early part, began moving up in the last half mile and, finishing fast, won going away. Moholi went into the lead at the end of a mile, but tired badly after clearing the last jump. Malvoisine received a poorly judged ride and finally tired. Valorous came with a rush in the last furlong. Stalker had plenty of speed for a turn of the field, then quit.

aW. R. Coe entry.

Scratched—Caruso, Kai Feng and Dunsany.

Whichone was in great form. He broke a bit slowly, and was pinned in on the rail for the first half mile. He was hard ridden around the turn to get out, and then came around the leader in the stretch, drew away and won galloping. (He worked out a mile and a quarter in 2:06.) Swinfield was kept well up and clear of interference and finished fast. Starpatic trailed far back in the early part, came around the field and closed gamely. Maya was well up and ran a good race. Black Majesty showed speed for six furlongs, then stopped.

not truly run. The winner carried top weight of 142 pounds and finished in 3:51 2-5, with G. H. Bostwick in the saddle.

The largest field of 2-year-olds to go to the post at the meeting, twenty-four, came out for the third race, and E. R. Bradley had the satisfaction of seeing his colors come down in front. The well-known Kentuckian viewed the race from his automobile and saw Baba Kenny, a daughter of Black Servant and Betty Beall, towrope the twenty-three others.

Rewards Backers at 3 to 1.

This was Baba Kenny's first start, but so hot was the tip that this horse was going to run away with the race that she was made the favorite. Even so, the price was as good as 3 to 1, because of the large number of starters. Eddie Legere rode the winner and after getting off well he had little to do but let her run.

The four and a half furlongs down the Widener chute were completed in 0:55, fair enough time considering that the track was not at its best and that Baba Kenny was racing for the first time.

A strong finish by Laverne Fator on Friaress landed the place for W. R. Coe, and Gifford A. Cochran's High Spade was third. The winner, in common with all the other starters, carried 116 pounds, as the test was for maiden fillies, all under level weight.

The first winner of the afternoon turned up in J. A. Coburn's Sanford. The favorite, Sanford had to come from far back to reward the form players by a half-length victory over Lemonade. Dim Ray was third.

TORO HOME FIRST, WITH GALAHAD NEXT

McLean's Five-Year-Old Scores by Length and Half in Feature at Chicago.

LADY BROADCAST IS THIRD

Nealon Kay, Paying $111.76 for $2 Mutuel Ticket, Shows the Way in Second Race.

CHICAGO, May 31 (AP).—Toro, a five-year-old bay horse by The Porter-Brocatelle, carried the colors of E. B. McLean to victory in the Robert M. Sweitzer Handicap, the outstanding attraction of a high-class program at Washington Park today. Galahad, from the Reuter Stable, was second under the wire, with Lady Broadcast finishing third.

The event was a $5,000 added allowance affair for three-year-olds and upward and attracted ten starters. It was worth $6,210 to the winner, $1,000 to second, $500 to third and $250 to fourth. Toro covered the distance in 1:51 4-5.

Toro, away well and full of speed, was kept under a strong pull until rounding the home stretch, where, given his head, he rapidly sprinted into the lead and was being eased up to win by a length and a half.

Galahad began fast, but quickly dropped far back into ninth place. He then was shaken up and gradually recovered the lost ground and when straightened out in stretch drive closed a big gap to take the place by a full length.

Lady Broadcast, away slowly, was held in restraint first six furlongs, then closed strong to take third money by two lengths from Martie Flynn.

Jean Valjean, Bobashela, Brown Wisdom, Blackwood, Stars and Bars and Karl Eitel finished in the order named.

Toro rewarded his backers at $10.66 to $2.

The talent received a bad jolt when Nealon Kay won the second number, paying $111.76 for a $2 mutuel ticket.

Cassilis Farm Wins 2d Leg on Victory Challenge Cup at Devon Horse Show

DEVON HONORS WON BY CASSILIS FARM

Mr. and Mrs. Willets Capture 2d Leg on Victory Challenge Cup at Horse Show.

STAR SHOT BEST OF PONIES

Takes Second Leg on Montpelier Trophy in Hackney Class in Final Session.

By HENRY R. ILSLEY.

Special to The New York Times.

DEVON, Pa., May 31.—Cassilis Farm, owned by Mr. and Mrs. J. Macy Willets of New York City and New Marlboro, Mass., today carried off the highest honors of the annual Devon horse show and county fair, which has been in progress since Monday, by capturing a second leg on the beautiful Devon victory challenge cup, which is awarded annually to the exhibitor winning the greatest number of points during the show. Cassilis Farm had won a first leg in 1928, and the trophy must be captured thrice by the same exhibitor before it becomes permanent property.

During the six days of the show Mr. and Mrs. Willets have rolled up a total of 240 points, far outscoring all competitors, points ranging from 10 for a championship down to 1 for a green ribbon. Cassilis Farm began piling up points at the very first session on Monday and quickly jumped into a position that was never seriously threatened.

Driven by his owner and showing in faultless fashion, the brilliant little brown gelding, Star Shot, won a second leg on the famous Montpelier Challenge Cup in the final session of the show, defeating the best of the hackney ponies. His owner, Mrs. Richard J. Goodman of Hartford, Conn., captured the same event a year ago.

Sunrise Takes Second.

The Montpelier Challenge Cup, one of the chief prizes of the carnival, is for the best hackney pony, stallion, mare or gelding, of 14 hands 2 inches or under. Ponies must be shown in harness to a suitable vehicle and be driven by a woman. The cup must be won three times by the same exhibitor for permanent possession.

Star Shot, now ten years old, was driven by Mrs. Goodman to defeat Mrs. Carl H. Hanna's brown gelding Sunrise, which was also driven by his Cleveland owner. Mrs. Willets drove her mare Cassilis Easter Maid to take third money, while fourth went to Braisefield Fanfare, owned by Alasa Farms of Alton, N. Y., and driven by Mrs. Alvah G. Strong.

Mr. and Mrs. Willets are the donors of the second Cassilis Farm Trophy, for the best saddle horse over 14 hands 2 inches, shown by an amateur. Conditions called for the cup to be won three times or twice in succession by the same owner for permanent possession. Today it changed hands for the last time. It was won last year by Dixlana, the Kentucky farm of Charles T. Fisher, after having been in competition since 1924, with the chestnut gelding Beaucaire.

Beaucaire Again Triumphs.

Miss Mary Fisher was up on Beaucaire today and he defeated three others for the trophy. Second was the chestnut mare Whispering Willow, owned and ridden by Miss Mary Fiers of Oklahoma City, Okla. Miss Miriam Winslow of Brookline, Mass., had the mount on her chestnut gelding Midnight Sun to take third, while fourth ribbon was won by James A. O'Day's brown gelding Ambassador.

Delightful weather graced the closing sessions and another large crowd turned out to watch the competitions.

A number of sweepstakes held prominent positions on the card and carried with them championships in their respective divisions. One of the most stubbornly contested was the stake for five-gaited saddle horses, in which a big field was out for the money.

First honors and $275 were won by the chestnut stallion King Genius, which was another victory for the Dixiana Farm. Second money of $175 was won by the bay mare Rhododendron, owned by the Boxwood Farm of Spring Lake, N. J. Miss Fiers was third with her bay gelding Vagabond Prince and won $115, while fourth and $75 went to the chestnut gelding Flowing Gold, owned by Mrs. Florence F. Dibble of Newburry, Mass.

Tea Garden Out on Course Turf Innovation in England

The building of a tea garden out on the Sandown Park race course is the latest turf innovation in England. It proved a success at the Spring meeting for the more democratic patrons. Such improved catering to the needs of visitors resulted in larger attendances than at any previous time since just after the war.

There was a time quite recently when the refreshment arrangements in the minor rings and for the visitors out on the course were far from satisfactory. Mr. Ridley, who has for many years managed the catering at Sandown Park, also has changed the arrangements in the minor ring so that they are considered much better than those in existence in many principal rings.

CARUSO GETS DECISION.

Outpoints Ciccarelli in Main Bout at 14th Regiment Armory.

Joe Caruso of the Fourteenth Infantry received the decision over Johnny Ciccarelli of the 106th Infantry in the main ten-round bout at the Fourteenth Regiment Armory in Brooklyn last night. Caruso weighed 145 pounds and Ciccarelli, 144½.

Frankie Albano, 127, of the Fourteenth Infantry and Frankie Cardiello, 126, of the Naval Militia fought a draw in the ten-round semi-final.

Al Dunbar, 128, of the 106th Infantry knocked out Ray Palmer, 127, of the regular navy in 46 seconds of the first round of a six-rounder.

Johnny Luiccini, 151, of the 106th Infantry outpointed Ed Chamberlain, 146, of the 369th Infantry in six rounds.

Frankie Fadetta, 132, of the Fourteenth Infantry received a six-round verdict over Ed Moran, 133, a regimental mate.

SHARKEY BOXES 4 ROUNDS.

Meets Grosso, Cavalie. and Solomon—1,500 Watch Schmeling.

ORANGEBURG, N. Y., May 31.—Jack Sharkey boxed four rounds today. Johnny Grosso entered the ring in the first and third sessions and Paul Cavalier and King Solomon in the second and fourth.

Five rounds of floor exercises followed.

ENDICOTT, N. Y., May 31.—About 1,500 persons, including Bert Stand, secretary of the State Athletic Commission, and D. Walker Wear, former member of the State License Committee, watched Max Schmeling in action today.

Because Larry Bello surrendered in the first round, Schmeling's boxing session was limited to four and one-half rounds. Lou Barba and George Neron went two rounds apiece under the heavy barrage.

LINDSAY'S BULLDOG WINS BEST IN SHOW

Ch. Maple Spring Buddie Boy Triumphs in L. I. Kennel Club Competition.

LIE OF COSALTA SCORES

Shepherd Leads Working Group—Peggy Bell, Irish Setter, Heads Bird Dogs.

Special to The New York Times.

BABYLON, L. I., May 31.—That splendid specimen of a bulldog, Ch. Maple Spring Buddie Boy, owned by Carey W. Lindsay of Baltimore, carried off best in show at the thirtieth annual exhibition of the Long Island Kennel Club, held today on the beautiful grounds of the Sampawam Club. The event was for the benefit of the Social Service Department of the Nassau Hospital. Ch. Maple Spring Buddie Boy is one of the handsomest bulldogs shown here recently, and Theodore Offerman, who judged the special for best in show, did not hesitate long in giving the Lindsay entry the ribbon which carried with it the sterling silver trophy offered by the Sampawam Club.

The other members of the final class were all excellent dogs. Representing the working group was the shepherd, Lie of Cosalta, owned by the Cosalta Kennels of Miss Marie J. Leary, Greenwich, Conn. Another outstanding quality was the pomeranian, Pom Bright Amberlight, owned by Miss Elsie Blum of Elmhurst, L. I.

Another favorite was the Kerry blue terrier, Bantry Beauty of Oakrest, owned by Mme. L. Seresi of Mamaroneck, N. Y. The bird dog group sent the Irish setter, Peggy Bell, owned by William H. Crossman of New York, into the final class. Representing the hounds was the greyhound, Ch. Venton Fairy of Longue Vue, owned by the Longue Vue Kennels of Lynbrook, L. I.

Cuccinello Will Be Honored At Polo Grounds on Tuesday

Anthony Cuccinello, young infielder with the Cincinnati Reds, will be honored at the Polo Grounds on Tuesday by a large delegation of fans from Queens. The day will mark his first appearance in his home city as a member of a major league baseball team. A special section has been reserved for those who will be at hand to cheer the youth, and Bernard M. Patten, former president of the Borough of Queens, will head a committee which will present him a gift.

Cuccinello was born in Long Island City and learned baseball on the sandlots of Queens. He started with the Springfields, a Long Island City semi-pro outfit, and then graduated to the Syracuse team of the International League. After a few seasons with Springfield, Lawrence and Danville, he was sold to Columbus of the American Association, where he won recognition as a leading fielder and batsman. This season he became a member of the Reds.

MAGNELLI WINS DECISION.

Defeats Siclari in Main Bout at New Ridgewood Grove.

Francisco Magnelli, Argentine bantam, received the decision over Joe Siclari of Ridgewood in the feature six-round bout at the New Ridgewood Grove last night before a crowd of about 2,000. Magnelli weighed 117; Siclari 115½.

In the semi-final Vincent Maracanda, 132, Greenpoint, knocked out Sid Silas, 134, South Brooklyn, in 2:53 of the sixth round. Phil Stark, 119, stopped Joe Catalone, 120, in the second round of another scheduled six-rounder.

The rest of the card was comprised of four-rounders. Danny London, 115, and George Warner, 113, battled to a draw; Billy Jacobs, 140, outpointed Al Flake, 139; Dudley Bright, 117, defeated Ted Christie, 120; Dave Brown, 120, knocked out Lew Franklin, 115, in the second round; Herman Riegel, middleweight, won the decision over Joe Sampera, and Petey Hayes, 119, won from Joe Defenbach, 120.

Arden Homestead Farm Juvenile Trotter Makes Best Time—Headwinds Retard Trials.

Special to The New York Times.

GOSHEN, N. Y., May 31.—A stiff head wind retarded the efforts of eighteen 2-year-old trotters, two 2-year-old pacers and five 3-year-olds which received records at the breeders' meeting at Good Time Park today. William K. Dickerson, trainer of the Arden Homestead Farm Stables, drove Sealing Wax, a 2-year-old trotter, owned and raised at the Arden Homestead stud here, to a record of 2:16, which was the fastest mile trotted during the day's trials, and was considered a very creditable performance on account of the weather conditions.

The colt is by Pluto Watts and Lucille Brooke. E. Roland Harriman is owner of both the sire and dam. Walter R. Cox, trainer of the Good Time Stables, drove Maud Dear, a full sister of last year's winner of the Hambletonian Stake, Walter Dear, a mile in 2:18¾.

Soldier Polo Series Starts Today.

The annual nine-match series between the polo teams of Fort Hamilton and Governors Island will start today at the Fort Hamilton reservation in Brooklyn. Cups will be presented to the players of the winning club as well as one to the team scoring the most goals for the series.

SANDS POINT PLAYS ROSLYN FOUR TODAY

Hitchcock to Lead Sands Point Team in High-Goal Game at Fleischmann Field.

MILBURN WILL TAKE PART

Veteran Star to Return to Formal Play With Harriman, Strawbridge, Hopping as Team-Mates.

High-goal polo will return to Fleischman Field, Sands Point, this afternoon when the Sands Point four, led by Thomas Hitchcock Jr., captain of the United States international squad against the English at Meadow Brook in September, faces the Roslyn aggregation.

The contest will inaugurate a series of matches which will continue weekly throughout the next two months and which will enable Hitchcock to get a line on prospective members of the team which will face the English. Today's event, which will get under way at 4 o'clock, will mark the return of Devereux Milburn to high-goal company. The veteran has played in matches of an informal nature this season, but last year did not get into action at all because of an injury he sustained in the Spring. Milburn will have as team-mates Averell Harriman, Robert Strawbridge Jr. and Earle A. S. Hopping. The combination is rated at twenty-eight goals, three more than the Sands Point quartet. Besides Hitchcock, the latter aggregation will have in its line-up Harold Talbott, G. H. Bostwick and A. Charles Schwartz.

The contest, while not an official test match, will be watched closely, as will the others at the field during the early part of the season.

Among the box holders for the season are Henry A. Alker, Charles Amory, David K. E. Bruce, William N. Dykman, Robert L. Gerry, Mrs. Lawrence Harriman, W. A. Harriman, Mrs. C. R. Holmes, D. Stewart Iglehart, Otto Kahn, William C. Langley, Robert Lehman, Bradley Martin, Philip M. Plant, Mortimer L. Schiff, A. Charles Schwartz, Mrs. R. Penn Smith Jr., Robert E. Strawbridge Jr., Herbert B. Swope, Thomas J. Regan, Harold E. Talbott Jr., Harry Guggenheim and Mrs. John D. Dreyer.

Plans for the intercollegiate polo tournament at the Rumson Country Club starting June 14 are progressing rapidly and the playing schedule for the five teams entered is expected to be announced within the next few days by the Intercollegiate Polo Association. The squads which will play are Harvard, Army, Yale, P. M. C. and Princeton.

WIND BUFFETS TINY RACERS

Liliom and Navator Blown on the Committee Boat—Wild Cat Is Dismasted.

By JAMES ROBBINS.

Special to The New York Times.

LARCHMONT, N. Y., May 31.—In a puffing northwester ninety-seven racing boats competed today on Long Island Sound in the Golden Jubilee Regatta of the Larchmont Yacht Club. The breeze was only eighteen miles an hour but lumpy.

When bursts of wind hit heavily canvased racers they were knocked down until their rails were far under. Some of the small craft took water in their cockpits, and those aboard them were forced to bail. There were many torn sails.

The Atlantic class racer Liliom, owned by Thomas F. Scholl, and the Victory class boat Navator, owned by Sidney V. Levine, came together at the finish line and were blown on the regatta committee boat Satanstoe. There was a jumble of sail and rigging before they could be cleared away.

Wild Cat Dismasted.

The Sound Interclub Class boat Wild Cat was dismasted after she finished the race and was back in the harbor making for her mooring.

The Class M sloops Avatar, owned by Floyd L. Carlisle, and Istalena, owned by George M. Pynchon, as well as the 12-meter craft, sailed a 19¾-mile course to Greenwich Point, to Oak Neck on the Long Island shore between Glen Cove and Oyster Bay, and back. They had two reaches and a trimmed sheet haul. Avatar won by 14 seconds over Istalena.

Clifford D. Mallory's 12-meter Typhoon beat Vincent Astor's Iris by 1 minute and 25 seconds.

For the New York Yacht Club "Forties" and the 10-meters, a course of 13¼ miles to Great Captain Island off Greenwich and to Matinecock Point was chosen. Holland S. Duell's 40-foot Rowdy led Mistral home by 42 seconds.

Mistral was sailed by her owner, William B. Bell. His daughter, Miss Helen Bell, who won with Mistral yesterday, was on board. H. G. Leslie's Typhoon and H. F. Whitney Jr.'s Banshee followed.

Branta 10-Meter Victor.

George G. Milne's 10-meter Branta was victor in her class by one minute over Francis S. Page's Narcissus, with W. Roy Manny's Synthetic third.

Avatar beat Istalena over the starting line by twenty-four seconds, so that the latter actually gained ten seconds on her.

The start, at 2:15 P. M., was close in most of the classes. Iris and Charles L. Harding's Anitra got away first of the 12-meters with their head sheets snapping in the wind. Tycoon was off to leeward of them. Rowdy and Banshee battled side by side for the first getaway among the "forties." Mistral was astern of them but to windward, and Typhoon was down to leeward.

Branta and Falcon led the 10-meters, with Dragon, Synthetic, Narcissus, Ballymena, Nachvak and Nautilus following. Falcon's jib sheet pulled out just after she crossed the line and she lost an advantage in the windward berths while the flapping headsail was gathered in.

Club Fifty Years Old.

At a luncheon before the races to celebrate the Larchmont Club's turning the fifty-year mark, Frank L. Anthony, the only surviving original member of the organization, told how a handful of young men gathered out on the rocks of Horseshoe Harbor to escape mosquitoes, and there founded the club in the sandbagger days of 1880.

A shotgun was used to start the races and a church was secured for occupancy six days a week as a clubhouse. The activity of the organization in Sound racing was recited. Commodore Harry Maxwell, who is recuperating from illness, was unable to be present.

Shamrock V Second in Race, But Fifth on Corrected Time

COWES, Isle of Wight, May 31 (AP).—Shamrock V, Sir Thomas Lipton's challenger for the America's Cup, sailed over the finish line in second place today in a special 39-mile race against five big yachts, but finished fifth in corrected time. The Lulworth won the race. It was her first appearance at this headquarters of yachting.

The yachts made a good start in an easterly breeze, King George's entrant, Britannia, leading, followed closely by Cambria, Candida, Shamrock V, White Heather and Lulworth. At the half-way points Shamrock V was leading, with Lulworth second and Britannia third. On the basis of corrected times Britannia finished second, although the royal boat actually trailed Shamrock V.

CAYUGA BEATS THISBE IN YACHTING SERIES

Wins Second Race in Contest to Decide Defender for the Canada's Cup Event.

Special to The New York Times.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 31.—Cayuga, international eight-meter yacht designed by Frank Payne, evened accounts with the Thisbe today in the second of the Rochester Yacht Club's long trial series to decide an American defender for the coming Canada's cup races.

Thisbe, winner in the Memorial Day opening race, trailed by one minute and eighteen seconds today over a twelve-mile course. Conewago, the Olin J. Stephens model, was again third, finishing nearly six minutes astern of the winner.

The race was sailed in a stiff northwest blow, accompanied by heavy seas. Conewago's performances in two day's of heavy weather have served to confirm early opinions that she would show to best advantage in lighter going.

MARGO WINS YACHT RACE.

Micmac Also First in Black Rock Club's Events on Sound.

Special to The New York Times.

BLACK ROCK, Conn., May 31.—Six of the Atlantic Class fleet and four of the Indian Class sailed today in the second race for the Season Cups at the Black Rock Yacht Club in Long Island Sound off here. A good sailing breeze blew out of the west and the boats made good time around the five-mile triangular course.

The winner in the Atlantic Class was John Field's Margo. Her margin over Susan Jennings's Kumon was only thirty seconds.

In the Indian Class, Micmac, owned by Horace B. Merwin Jr., sailed home first by 3 minutes 20 seconds over Jonathan Grout's Meda.

NEW SEGRAVE BOAT OF RADICAL DESIGN

Miss England II Will Have Only One Propeller With 12,500 Revolutions Per Minute.

WILL HAVE BULBOUS BOW

Marks Departure in Hull Construction—Hopes to Make Turns at 100 Miles Per Hour.

By VERNON VAN NESS.

Miss England II, with which Sir Henry Segrave will challenge for the British International Trophy, otherwise known as the Harmsworth Cup, on the Detroit River this year, will be launched in England on Wednesday, thus taking rank as the first of the three challengers for Gar Wood's honors to take to the water.

But though this incident naturally arouses keen interest in motor boat racing circles in this country, the announcement of the details of the boat have brought forth even greater speculation.

To begin with, Sir Henry has announced that his boat will be a single propeller job, driven by two Rolls-Royce engines. This in itself is a surprise since it has been the belief right along that he would employ two propellers to avoid the torque problem.

To add to torque troubles, however, Sir Henry's new boat will have a propeller revolution of 12,500 per minute. On this point experts in this country declare themselves stumped. Torque in a boat with a propeller turning at 2,500 is considered problem enough. To overcome the torque the common practice is to use two propellers, each turning in the opposite direction. In this manner torque is overcome.

Boat Would Have Turned Over.

Another method used is to weight the boat on the side away from which the propeller is revolving. Miss Marian B. Carstairs, in her effort to lift the Harmsworth trophy last year, employed this divise. It worked fine with the boat going at top speed, but when she throttled down there was a decided list. Incidentally, her motors did not turn over at anything like 12,500 revolutions per minute and experts say if they did the boat would have turned right over in the water.

But how Sir Henry will fare with his motors (it is a twin-motored job, developing about 2,000 horse power each and turning the screw over at 12,500 revolutions per minute) is something experts here profess to be in the dark about. Beyond that Sir Henry has other radical departures that stamp his boat as at least unusual. Some believe that it is too freakish. But most experts refuse to go that far until the boat has been tried out.

Miss England II is of the bulbous bow type and tapers toward the stern. This is an innovation that is along the lines of the Europa and her sister ship Bremen, the fleet German transatlantic liners. It is a decided departure for racing hull construction. The theory of the bulbous bow is that it cleaves the water more cleanly and with less wake and without so deep a cut as the orthodox bows of the wedge type.

Motors Placed Astern.

In a racing boat going at a high speed that means a great deal, for it brings less wake, lessens the skin resistance and keeps the boat riding at or near the top of the water. This latter, of course, is the aim of hydroplanes, of which Miss England II is a highly drawn example. The motors in Sir Henry's boat are placed dead astern, the drivers immediately forward and still further forward a gear box, back from which runs the propeller shaft.

On either end of the boat will be a rudder. This is not a customary method. Gar Wood in Miss America VIII, for instance, has the rudder forward, just in front of the step. Experts, considering Sir Henry's two rudders, pointed out that it may be he was not certain if the boat would ride flat, and thus put one in the stern as a precautionary measure. Others pointed out that with two rudders there would be no skid, an important aid when turning.

The turning also came in for study. Also the probable speed that the British sportsman is likely to make. There is no doubt but that Sir Henry has the most dangerous threat for the trophy that Gar Wood has faced since he lifted the cup in 1920.

More than that, Sir Henry is a noted automobile race driver and holds the world's automobile speed record. He is a super-speed driver, and his declaration that he would try for 120 miles an hour with his challenger this year has not been taken lightly.

He did not say, in announcing the launching date and the details of his boat last week, that he expected to go 120 miles an hour, but he is known to have built with that speed in mind. This brings up the point of turning.

The Harmsworth races will be staged on the Detroit River Aug. 29, 30 and Sept. 1, 2. The Detroit River course is five miles long, or rather it is five miles around, the elongated course, which somewhat resembles the sole of a man's shoe in shape. Six turns around this course constitute a heat. The first boat winning two heats wins the race.

The factor of turning is mighty important on this course. Gar Wood has generally slowed down to around sixty miles per hour and never more than sixty-five in making the upper turn, for at that point the course between buoys is only about 700 feet. The lower turn is not so sharp. If Sir Henry gets his boat above 100 miles per hour and makes turns, as he said he hoped to do, without slowing down very appreciably, he will be turning news pages in motor boat racing history. Some doubt that it can be done. Veteran race drivers say it is impossible. Others say the boat will turn over.

Solved Problem of Turning.

However, Sir Henry and Hubert Scott-Paine, who is also to bring a challenging boat to Detroit for the races, say they have solved the problem of turning at high speed. If they have, then there is one more reason for being apprehensive regarding Wood's ability to successfully defend his cherished trophy. Of course, Wood has not yet announced only that Miss America VIII, and his plans for defense. It is known quite possibly Miss America IX, will be the defenders. Miss America VIII is being tuned up to increase her motive power and Wood visions 100 miles per hour or better. Aside from that, however, Wood has not announced a thing.

Wood has always driven with one assistant, the trusty Olin Johnson, and it always has been Johnson who worked the throttles while Wood handled the wheel. It is a two-man job, especially when going around the turns.

Sir Henry, however, intends to handle both the wheel and the throttles, though he will have two mechanics in the boat with him. One of these will watch the instruments, the other will assist at the controls. Skeptics say that Sir Henry, if he attains 100 miles or better, will find the work of handling the wheel sufficient and that he will not be able to pay any attention to the controls, leaving them to his assistant.

Miss England II's hull has a primary structure of alloy, is sheathed below the water line with seven-ply Honduras mahogany, which is bolted to the chassis on which the two motors have been built and around which the hull was constructed. The boat, complete, weighs about 9,000 pounds.

7 WORLD'S MARKS SET BY OUTBOARD DRIVERS

Maddocks Clips Two Records, Mrs. Hickey, Miss Mueller One Each at Worcester.

WORCESTER, Mass., May 31 (AP).—The record-breaking activities of outboard drivers gathered here for the third annual regatta of the Worcester County Motor Boat Club was brought to a close this forenoon with seven new world marks being set up in time trials. Ross Maddocks, Cambridge, driving in Class F, made the fastest time, 47.876 miles per hour to break a record of 46.750 he established here Thursday.

It was Maddocks's second record feat of the day. Earlier in the morning he sent a Class D, Division III, boat to a record of 45.973 miles per hour.

Mrs. Mildred Hickey and Hilda Mueller made new marks. Mrs. Hickey broke her old record in Class C, Division II, while Miss Mueller set a new mark in Class D, Division I. Warren G. Harris, Ted Thomson of Lake Placid, N. Y., and Elliott A. Spencer of Westbrook, Conn., were the other record breakers.

CUP YACHTS GATHER IN SOUND THIS WEEK

Three New America's Cup Boats and Resolute and Vanitie, Old Ones, to Race June 11, 12.

CRAFT TO CARRY NUMBERS

Defense Candidates Differ Materially—First Visit of Weetamoe, Whirlwind to These Waters.

By JAMES ROBBINS.

This week three of the new America's Cup yachts that are to compete with the old ones off Glen Cove are expected to gather in this end of Long Island Sound. Whirlwind, the Boston-built boat, is to put in at City Island for some final touches.

Enterprise and Weetamoe, the other new ones, are scheduled to come from Narragansett Bay, along with Resolute and Vanitie, the old craft, and put into Hempstead Harbor. There they will await the New York Yacht Club races on June 11 and 12, in which the five big racers will compete.

It will be the first time Weetamoe and Whirlwind have been in these waters, and they are certain to undergo critical inspection as they lie moored awaiting the races. It will not be until they get under sail, however, that any comparison of their qualities can be gathered.

Underbodies Are Different.

The difference in their underbody and keel construction is great, but will be hidden under water. Weetamoe is the sharpest of all four new boats and the most cut away on her forefoot, whereas Whirlwind has the longest and deepest fin of all.

Their rigging and sail plan also differ quite materially, but not much to the eye of the casual observer or the landlubber, who goes to view the yachts more for the spectacle they present under sail than anything else.

Even Enterprise's taller mast than the others is not apparent unless she is alongside another craft. The seams in the bronze plating of her hull show up, but Weetamoe also has those seams in her topsides. The one distinguishing point about Enterprise is her wind pennant, which is set aft away from her masthead on a strut through which her permanent backstay runs down.

Whirlwind Has Pointed Stern.

Whirlwind has a pointed stern, and her name is on each quarter. She also has a black walnut rail above her white topsides, and her underbody is painted green. Weetamoe and Enterprise show their bronze hulls below their white topsides.

Resolute, the old defender, may be identified by the hawse-holes in her bow, which look like fish eyes and give her the appearance of having a cod nose. Vanitie has a raised rail at her bow, part of the original rail that was cut off her.

The racers also will have large black numbers on their sails. Weetamoe will have 1; Whirlwind, 3; Enterprise, 4; Resolute, J 1, and Vanitie, I 1.

30 Entries for Race.

More than thirty entries have been received for the Bayside-Block Island race for auxiliaries, which will start on Aug. 1. To each yacht that finishes the course there will be presented a silver plaque with the inscription:

"This good ship sailed the course. Bayside-Block Island Race 1930."

With practically all the racing schedules completed, the important events for sailing craft this month will be:

June 7—Manhasset Bay regatta.
June 11—America's Cup defense boats in New York Yacht Club race off Glen Cove.
June 12—Seventy-ninth annual regatta of New York Yacht Club, Glen Cove.
June 14—Seawanhaka regatta, Oyster Bay.
June 16 and 17—America's Cup defense yachts in Seawanhaka race, Oyster Bay.
June 16, 17 and 18—College races—Oyster Bay.
June 18—Rye to New London race.
June 21—Knickerbocker regatta, Port Washington.
June 22—Bermuda race start, New London.
June 22—Manhasset Bay regatta.
June 23, 24 and 25—America's Cup defense yachts in Eastern Y. C. race, off Newport.
June 28—Riverside Y. C. regatta.
June 29—Larchmont regatta.
June 29—Manhasset Star Class race.

GERMAN-AMERICANS SCORE.

Touring Soccer Team Defeats Hanover Eleven, 2 to 1.

HANOVER, Germany, May 31 (AP).—The touring German-American soccer football team today defeated a team from the Hanover Sport Verein, 2 to 1, before 2,000 spectators. The score at half time was 1—1.

METEOR TRIUMPHS IN SIX-METER RACE

Defeats Saleema by 1 Minute 11 Seconds in Seawanhaka Corinthian Club Series.

LUCIE LEADS FOR IRVIN CUP

Fourth Place Gives Her 24¼ Points—Mars and Comet Collide in Strong Breeze.

Special to The New York Times.

OYSTER BAY, N. Y., May 31.—Jack Shethar sailed O. W. Johnson's six-meter yacht Meteor to victory off here today in the second of three special races sponsored by the Seawanhaka Corinthian Yacht Club and gained third ranking for the Commodore Irvin Cup, which will be awarded after tomorrow's race. Meteor defeated Nelson Doubleday's Saleema by 1 minutes 11 seconds.

Briggs Cunningham, who won with his Lucie in yesterday's race, came in fourth today to lead in the competition with a total of 24¼ points. J. P. Wilson's Comet, which finished third today, ranks second with 21 points.

Three of the six-meter boats met with minor mishaps. Just before the start ten craft were jockeying in the stiff northwest wind. Those behind the line were marking time, while those on the other side were trying to come about.

Van S. Merle-Smith was coming up on the port tack with his yacht Mars. Olin Stephans at the helm of Comet came toward Mars on the starboard tack and called for the right of way, but the Mars was so close to the committee boat Nebula that she could not give way.

Comet crashed stem on into Mars's starboard deck, ripping away her rigging and stays. Mars left the contest shortly after and took tow for shore. The Comet was badly shaken but she stayed in the race.

On the last leg, B. S. Cunningham's Lucie lost its port spreader, but as the boats were on the starboard tack the accident did not cripple her.

The six-meter boats took the port tack from the starting point off Centre Island and beat across the bay to Greenwick Point, rounding the buoy and sailing on to the cow's bell off Shippan Point. From here the beat back to the finish ended a ten and a half mile triangular course.

W. P. Belknap's Ranee was first to finish in the Atlantic Coast one-design class, while Gilbert Colgate Jr.'s Nichevo II finished second to take the lead with 17¼ points for the cup offered by Rear Commodore Merle-Smith for that class.

Only three boats in Class S started. Duncan Sterling Jr. sailed his Felicity to victory. He also won yesterday's race for this class and leads with 9½ points for the Vice Commodore Morgan Cup.

The twenty-five-mile breeze which started the boats off increased throughout and was blowing about thirty miles when the last boat finished.

ROOSEVELT BOAT LAUNCHED

Bermuda Race Craft Takes Water at Nova Scotia.

Special to The New York Times.

TRURO, N. S., May 31.—A yacht was launched at the Eastern Shipbuilding Corporation, Shelburne, N. S., today for George Roosevelt of New York. The yacht is named Mistress and will compete in the Bermuda race. The new craft is of beautiful design and is sixty-two feet in length. Her spars were made in Germany. Her deck and top sides are finished in teak.

YANKEE IS TESTED IN FIVE-HOUR SAIL

Gets Her Stiffest Trial, Crew Being Kept Busy Shifting Canvas on Massachusetts Bay.

BREAKS OUT HER SPINNAKER

Three Small Jibtopsails Also Used—Workmen Make Repairs to Cup Yacht's Rigging.

Special to The New York Times.

MARBLEHEAD, Mass., May 31.—The Boston America's Cup defense candidate Yankee received the stiffest sail test today, being out more than five hours in Massachusetts Bay and flinging out half a dozen head sails to a moderate northwester. The crew was kept constantly on the jump and had much practice in handling canvas and working winches.

After more than a week of lowering weather and head winds, the skies cleared this morning and the Yankee, dropping her mooring at 10:30, headed out into the bay, breaking out her spinnaker when once outside Marblehead Rock.

In the rush down the breeze the big sail was shifted several times, which gave all hands a chance to handle backstays and runners.

About noon the yacht was hauled on the breeze and while standing up the bay on the starboard tack she tried out three small jibtopsails, the crew making the changes in fairly good time. Then came a run offshore, again under a Genoa jib, which was taken in after half an hour and a big ballooner substituted.

As soon as her moorings were picked up a launch was sent ashore to a local shipyard for additional fittings, the yacht having had trouble with the lashing of her spreaders.

The double strut near the head of the mast has been working loose and two seamen spent an hour aloft this morning giving it additional fastenings. The Yankee will have another long session on the bay tomorrow.

WHIRLWIND TOWED TO CITY ISLAND

America's Cup Yacht Arrives From Neponset With Sails Stowed in Her Hold.

TO GET FINISHING TOUCHES

Will Be Hauled Out for Two More Coats of Paint Before Sail Trials on Sound.

Coming through Long Island Sound under tow of her power tender Twistar, the America's Cup yacht Whirlwind arrived at City Island last night. Following her in tow of a tug was the Minas Princess, which houses the yacht's crew.

The Whirlwind came from Neponset, Mass., where she was built by the Lawley & Son Corporation, and was brought by easy stages through the Cape Cod Canal. She was under bare mast, her sails being stowed in her hold.

On the racer were Landon K. Thorne and Paul Hammond, two members of the syndicate that owns her, and Adrian Iselin 2d, who will be her navigator.

Whirlwind is the racer designed by L. Francis Herreshoff, son of Nat Herreshoff, the latter the creator of the last five cup defenders. She is the largest of the four new defense yachts, being 130 feet over all and 9 feet and 3 inches longer than Enterprise. She also is the only wooden-hulled boat of the four, the others being of bronze. Her mahogany planking is painted white above the water line and green below.

The racer will have the finishing touches of her rigging applied at City Island. She will be hauled out of the water there at the Robert Jacobs shipyard on Thursday to have two more coats of paint put on her underbody. Then she will be taken out on the Sound and tuned up under sail for the first race of the cup defense boats, that of the New York Yacht Club off Glen Cove on June 11.

ASK IMPROVEMENTS FOR 42D ST. AREA

Property Owners Push Plans for Building Law Change and East River Steamer Landing.

WOULD RAZE SIXTH AV. "L"

Civic Body Reports Support for Stagger Office-Hour Plan and Other Moves to Relieve Congestion.

A broad program of improvements designed to relieve traffic congestion and foster business activity in the Forty-second Street area was outlined as its objective for the coming year by the Forty-second Street Property Owners and Merchants Association at the annual meeting of the organization last week.

One of the proposed changes included in the program as presented by George W. Sweeney, president, was an amendment to the building regulations of the zoning ordinance to allow new structures erected in Forty-second Street between Eighth and Tenth Avenues to go up to a height twice the width of the street before setbacks are required. The section now is in a "one-and-one-half times" district. Such a change would hasten the improvement of the area with new buildings, it was stated. Signatures of the required number of property owners have been received and application for the change will be made to the Board of Estimate.

Approval by the Department of Docks of a proposal for a landing for Sound steamers at the foot of East Forty-second Street has been received by the association, which is engaged in negotiating with several steamship companies operating between New York and New England. It is estimated that an expenditure of $168,000 will be required to rebuild the wharf. Considerable saving in time for many steamer passengers is believed to be possible under the plan. The association also is arranging a conference of interested persons with city officials for the purpose of establishing a yacht basin near the foot of East Forty-second Street to accommodate the boats of many executives whose offices are in the midtown district.

Changes in Office Hours.

In an effort to lessen congestion during the morning and afternoon rush hours the association has been active in a movement to have a large number of employes change their office hours from the usual time of 9 A. M. to 5 P. M. to other hours. The movement has gained considerable headway, the association reports, and more than 9,000 workers are cooperating in the stagger plan. The property owners' body is seeking to expand this system, due to the continued growth of the midtown section. It estimates that in the Grand Central zone alone about 56,000 new workers will be added during the next year.

F. A. Muschenheim is chairman of a committee which has been at work for some time in an effort to get improved service on the subway shuttle between Grand Central Terminal and Times Square. A recent report of the committee pointed out that a moving walkway had been proposed several years ago and received considerable support, but was never put into operation.

A committee of the association is working with committees from other civic bodies in an effort to have the Sixth Avenue elevated structure removed at an early date. The association is in favor of substituting buses for the trolley line on that street, and has approved a change from trolley to bus service on the Forty-second Street and Madison Avenue lines, and is supporting the petition for such a change now pending before the Board of Estimate.

Credit Body to Hear R. P. Miller.

Rudolph P. Miller, consulting engineer and member of the American Society of Testing Materials, will address the luncheon meeting of the Credit Association of the Building Trades of New York next Tuesday in the Hotel McAlpin. Mr. Miller is expected to point out the desirability of encouraging the introduction of new materials and methods in building construction.

REALTORS PROTEST DRY LAW PADLOCKS

National Association of Realty Boards Opposes Prohibition Enforcement Methods.

PLACE BURDEN ON OWNER

Adopt Resolution Protesting Against Transference of the Task of Enforcing the Law.

Emphatic protest against virtual transference of the task of enforcement of the prohibition law to the shoulders of the property owners of the country through the padlock provision is made by the National Association of Real Estate Boards in a resolution adopted by its board of directors at its quarterly meeting held in Chicago last week.

The resolution makes it clear that the action of the association is not directed against the prohibition law itself, but is concerned solely with the question of padlocking premises as a method of law enforcement.

Such a method, putting the burden of surveillance of the behavior of the tenant upon the property owner and penalizing the owner for the tenant's action of which the owner may be ignorant, upon which, in any case, he has no legal method of checking, and concerning which he cannot openly charge the tenant of law violation without making himself liable to suit for damages, unless he can secure out-and-out proof to support his suspicions, is an invasion of fundamental property rights unwarranted under the Federal Constitution and altogether unprecedented in American governmental procedure, the association points out.

Text of Resolution.

The text of the resolution is as follows: "The National Association of Real Estate Boards, while it takes no part in the attacks being waged against the national prohibition amendment, yet considers itself under obligation at this time to speak in no uncertain terms upon the injustice of State and Federal statutes which allow the padlocking of premises on the ground that buildings become a public nuisance if a prohibition law is violated within them.

"Even the fact that an owner was absolutely without knowledge of his tenant's dereliction is no legal defense against closure nor is legal right given an owner to remedy conditions for which his tenant and not himself is responsible.

"As long as the courts made no real attempt to apply padlock provisions and there was no great pressure brought to bear for their enforcement, this association felt it as well to remain silent.

"But recent reports of a law enforcement committee advising stringent application of padlocking laws, and the many serious complaints made to this association, setting forth cases of substantial injury done owners who had no knowledge of, nor in any way participated in, tenants' violations, lead this association formally to protest against this encroachment on elementary property rights.

"The National Association of Real Estate Boards is concerned in this matter not only with the general welfare of the real estate business, but with the rights of owners and rights of the lenders of money upon real estate security. Various large financial houses hesitate to lend upon certain classes of property because of the danger of closure and loss of the sources of income.

"Be it resolved, therefore, by the board of directors of the National Association of Real Estate Boards that it is not and should not be necessary to enforce the prohibition law by closure of premises, and, until these unjust provisions can be removed from the laws, that every effort be made to avoid their application, especially where the owner has had no opportunity to abate what is declared in such laws to be a nuisance."

RAZING 33D ST. HOUSE FOR RESTAURANT SITE

Old Ellis Building Will Be Replaced by Extension of Childs Unit.

Razing of the old building at 157 West Thirty-third Street, purchased two months ago from the George W. Ellis estate for a reported price of $150,000, will be started at once by the Childs Company, the new owners, to clear the site for a new building which will house an extension of the Childs' restaurant at 425-27 Seventh Avenue.

The old structure has been unoccupied for a number of years. The Childs Company had sought for a long time to purchase it from the late Mr. Ellis, but he had refused to consider selling. J. C. Westervelt, architect, reported to the company that the old house had been for a long time in a state of disrepair, that remodeling was impractical.

The Childs firm announced that it had renewed its leases for ten years on the two buildings at 425 and 427 Seventh Avenue, to Oct. 1, 1941, at an aggregate rental of about $350,000. Esther Eugenie Cohen and Annie H. Biehn are the respective owners.

Another improvement to be undertaken by the restaurant firm soon will be the remodeling of its building at 2,689 Broadway, near 103d Street.

Bronx Borough Population.

Present indications are that when the 1930 Federal census enumeration is completed, it will be revealed that the Bronx has a population of well over 1,100,000, according to the estimate of the Bronx Board of Trade.

Ground Broken At Stewart Manor For First Master Model Home

Marking the start of actual construction on one of the series of master model homes to be built in the metropolitan district of New York as a result of the 1929 National Better Homes Architectural Competition sponsored by Home Owners Institute, Inc., James Graham, vice president of Realty Associates, Inc., on Sunday last turned the first spadeful of earth for the foundation excavation on a lot at the southeast corner of Salisbury Avenue and Adams Street, Stewart Manor, L. I.

The ceremony followed a luncheon at the Stewart Manor Country Club, where Mr. Graham and a number of Long Island and New York representatives of leading construction material and home equipment firms were guests of the Home Owners Institute of New York.

The luncheon and subsequent ceremonies also marked the third Better Homes campaign, in which Mr. Graham and his organization has collaborated with Home Owners Institute in the nation-wide movement to improve, through education and demonstration, the architecture, construction and equipment of the American home.

Homes in Metropolitan Zone.

"The progress of this movement in the direction of better homes and more home owners," Mr. Graham declared, "has been little short of amazing. It has been strikingly demonstrated here and wherever the educational movement has reached in the increased demands for beauty, permanence and quality construction each year, including insistence upon virtually all nationally advertised and proved improvements in facilities and equipment, and in the increased numbers of home owners."

The Stewart Manor house will be one of six master model homes constructed in various parts of the metropolitan district from prize-winning designs in the $29,500 competition. One is now being built at Cheelcroft, near Ridgewood, N. J., by Harold W. Cheel, and ground will be broken shortly for the third, to be built at Sleepy Hollow Manor, North Tarrytown, by the Henry Mandel Companies.

The design for the Stewart Manor master model home was created by Amedeo Leone, A. I. A., of Detroit and won the third grand national prize and the Michigan regional prize in the competition last Summer. The plans of this house, No. 59, with a detailed description by the architect, were printed in the Real Estate Section of THE NEW YORK TIMES on April 13 last.

The same design is being used for master model homes in Detroit and Chicago.

Forty Master Model Homes.

A partial list of twenty-four cities in which prominent realtors and builders had been selected by Home Owners Institute for the construction of master model homes and approved by Raymond M. Hood of New York, chairman of the National Jury of Award, was announced in THE NEW YORK TIMES last Sunday by President L. Porter Moore of the institute. Approximately forty master model homes will be constructed in thirty cities before the campaign concludes.

The Stewart Manor house will be opened to the public for a four weeks' demonstration period on Aug. 15, Mr. Graham announced, and will mark another distinct step in combining quality construction and complete equipment in the medium-priced home.

George C. Carothers, secretary of Home Owners Institute, presided at the luncheon at the Stewart Manor Country Club and introduced Mr. Graham, following a brief outline of the aims and accomplishments of Home Owners Institute during the past decade in encouraging more and better homes.

"We started building master model homes with Home Owners Institute in 1927," Mr. Graham said. "We built another in 1928. Every time we build one we have to put more into it—and to all that follow and are sold because of it. Why? Because the home owner today wants 'nothing but the best,' and all of the best. In 1928 we drew more than 35,000 people to see our master model home in the first week. That house bred a flock—nineteen homes for which it served as the model in construction, materials and equipment.

"In the new home we have decided to put in every standard and proved

REALTY MEN SEEK LOWER HOME COST

National Association Studying Means of Reducing Expense in House Building.

MASS OUTPUT CONSIDERED

New Business Methods in Realty Field to Be Another Topic of Convention in Toronto.

Possible means of reducing building costs and sales price on comfortable homes to place them within reach of more persons of limited income will be one of the subjects of discussion at the annual convention of the National Association of Real Estate Boards to be held in Toronto, Canada, July 9, 10 and 11.

The extent to which mass production and improved technique may figure in reducing such expense will be discussed by Ernest P. Goodrich of New York City, president of the Research Institute for Economic Housing.

The effect on real estate of changes in merchandising and distribution methods will be discussed by Alvin D. Dodd of Chicago, assistant to the president of Sears, Roebuck & Co. The program of the brokers' division will centre around suggestions to the real estate man for dealing with his commodity on the basis of its new values and uses. A. S. Taylor of Cleveland, former president of the national association, will talk on the present real estate market and sources of new business.

Newton C. Farr, president of the Chicago Real Estate Board, will speak before the division on "The One Man Office Versus Large Sales Organizations." Mr. Farr will tell how the office with a small personnel can do a proportionately large scale of business, and will contrast the operation and explain the advantages of both the large and the small office.

The organization and operation of real estate investment trusts in such a way as to insure safety to the investor's funds will be discussed by Harold G. Ferguson, Los Angeles. Mr. Ferguson, who heads one of the largest real estate investment trusts in the country, is president of the Los Angeles Real Estate Board and of the Los Angeles Stock Exchange.

"The Outlying Business District and Its Effect on Downtown Business Property" is the subject of the address which Mason Case, former president of the Los Angeles Real Estate Board, will give before the brokers' division. Mr. Case will describe the Los Angeles sub-centre developments and tell what effect these developments have had upon downtown real estate values, as well as the surrounding property.

"New Discoveries in Selling Homes Today" will be discussed by Ralph Dunn, Syracuse, chairman of the sales managers' section of the association.

A large number of real estate men in the metropolitan district will attend the convention.

Gas Service for City Island.

If the Public Service Commission approves, The Bronx Gas and Electric Company will, in the near future, furnish gas service to City Island. At present the island is without any gas supply.

URGE NEW PARK AREAS FOR LOWER EAST SIDE

Property Owners Want Definite Sections Protected for Apartment Development.

The lower east side is fortunately located for development into a residential centre, and protection by zoning of some of the waterfront area for this purpose would foster the erection of more large apartment houses, in the opinion of Daniel J. Brogan, chairman of the zoning committee of the East Side Chamber of Commerce, which has been making a study of community planning.

"The plan which the chamber is working on will not attempt to turn logical business areas into residential sections, but would definitely locate home centres in territory, some of which is on the waterfront, now unrestricted," Mr. Brogan says. "Under existing conditions a builder might erect a fine apartment house in a desirable location only to find it shortly afterward hemmed in by a factory or garage.

"The piers on the waterfront are necessary, at least for the present, but the idea that some of the old warehouses are necessary for the business demands of the city is a fallacy. In former days, when the city had not developed beyond Fifty-ninth Street, such might have been the case, but that is not true today.

"From Gouveneur Street along the Hook to Seventh Street is a stretch which rightfully belongs to the people of New York for park and recreational purposes. The present condition of the waterfront is an example of the manner in which valuable but neglected property may deteriorate. Many of the docks are piled high with débris. Along the bulkhead line are rows of discarded wagons and junk.

"A few street widenings and zoning restrictions such as many property owners are advocating would do much to hasten a rehabilitation of this conveniently located area."

GRAMERCY PARK HOMES.

New Sixteen-Story Edifice Being Added at Nineteenth Street.

To the large number of fine apartment houses in and around Gramercy Park is being added another, which will be opened for tenants early in the Fall. This is a sixteen-story building known as the Gramercy Apartments, nearing completion on the northwest corner of Irving Place and Nineteenth Street.

"The wide demand for various suites in the Gramercy Park houses," says Donald Jones, vice president of Gaines, Van Nostrand & Morrison, "is reflected in the type of buildings which have been built. Many of the apartment houses have large suites ranging from six to nine rooms and others have the intermediate sized apartments from two to five rooms. There is a large demand for small suites and the type of house is being supplied by modern improvements.

"The last five years have witnessed a rapid increase in building and the old private brownstone houses which stood on the north side of the park have almost disappeared and in their places rise imposing fifteen-story structures."

TOWER RISES 836 FEET.

Lofty Observation Floor in Bank of Manhattan Building.

The observation tower of the Bank of the Manhattan Company Building at 40 Wall Street is 836 feet above the street and is second in height only to the observation floor of the Eiffel Tower in Paris, according to the Starrett Corporation. The tower comprises two floors, the sixty-ninth and seventieth, and will accommodate 100 persons at a time. It will be opened to the public early this month.

The observation point in the Eiffel Tower is 905 feet high, according to the Starrett company; or about 69 feet higher than that in the Bank of the Manhattan Company Building. The observation floor in the Chrysler Building is 783 feet high, it was stated.

Doormats on Sidewalks Illegal.

A rubber mat on the sidewalk in front of a store door, or apartment house or home entrance constitutes a sidewalk encumbrance, and therefore is not permitted by law.

MORE APARTMENTS IN VILLAGE CENTRE

Repaving of Long Torn-Up Streets Is Restoring Normal Traffic Conditions.

NEW OPERATIONS PLANNED

Vacant Houses Facing Grove Street Park Present Ruinous Appearance.

Indications of renewed building activity in the upper section of the old Greenwich Village area are seen in the rapidity with which the steel work is going up for the tall Bing & Bing apartment house at the southeast corner of Greenwich Avenue and Horatio Street and the sixteen-story addition to the Holly Hotel on the west side of Washington Square at the south corner of Washington Place. Another big operation announced to start in July will be a fifteen-story apartment house at the northwest corner of Christopher and Bleecker Streets for which plans are being prepared by the architect, H. I. Feldman.

The Horatio Street and Greenwich Avenue apartment house marks the first operation in that district by the Bing & Bing interests in the series of multi-family homes for which many choice plots were purchased about two years ago. The old buildings on two large parcels facing Abingdon Square were torn down several months ago but structural work on the projected apartments has not yet started.

Another large Bing & Bing plot is at 41-49 Christopher Street, between Waverly Place and Seventh Avenue South, close to the Sheridan Square subway station and opposite the little Grove Street Park. The plot fronting 114 feet on Christopher Street contains four old houses and one large brick stable. They were vacated several weeks ago and at the present time present a melancholy appearance of semi-destruction. Their approaching demolition has been hastened by the age-old disposition of the small boy and, perhaps, others to smash in the doors and shatter the window glass of unoccupied buildings. Some effort at temporary protection has been made by nailing up the entrances.

Unsightly Row of Houses.

Up to a few weeks ago two of the houses, with their red brick fronts and dormer attic windows, were thoroughly typical of the well-kept, comfortable little homes of early days in Greenwich Village. The ruinous exterior of this row presents a marked contrast to the generally neat appearance of the Grove Street Park and Sheridan Square localities. The two adjoining buildings, at 51 and 53, are being neatly remodeled, the ground floor of the latter being occupied by a French bakery which has been patronized by Greenwich Village residents for more than a generation.

The Grove Street addition to the Corn Exchange branch bank has re-

ACTIVE FEATURES OF CITY AND SUBURBAN REALTY MARKET

VOICES OPPOSITION TO 57TH ST. BRIDGE

Would Depreciate Values and Congest Traffic, Says Fifth Avenue Association.

RETAIL BUSINESS INJURY

Captain Pedrick Sees Destruction to Fifty-seventh Street in Excessive Commercial Trucking.

The Fifth Avenue Association announced yesterday that it would oppose the construction of the projected bridge across the Hudson River at Fifty-seventh Street. The War Department, it was stated a few days ago, had consented to reopen hearings on the bridge plan next Wednesday.

In making its announcement the Fifth Avenue Association points out that the Fifty-seventh Street bridge would break down realty values, might cause a shift of business, and would take up too much valuable property for approaches. On the other hand, it says that the Holland Tunnel condition is what should be expected of all future under-river crossings, either of the East River or the Hudson River. Here, the association points out, property values have increased, there is no undesirable "bridge basement" to depreciate values, and the separated entrance and exit portals of the tunnel dissipate congestion instead of concentrating it.

Cities Detrimental Factors.

"The city obviously needs traffic relief," said Captain William J. Pedrick, executive vice president of the Fifth Avenue Association, "but traffic projects which will deluge established business sections with commercial and truck traffic should be avoided. Traffic relief is needed to safeguard business — traffic relief which kills business in the process of safeguarding it is better left unplanned. Fifty-seventh Street between Broadway and Lexington Avenue has seen great development during the past few years. Recently this development has spread west to Eighth Avenue and east almost as far as the East River. It is a combined business and residential development which has sent property values to greater heights than were ever thought possible.

"The question which the proposed construction of this bridge raises is: What will be the effect on this development of a bridge disgorging eight to ten lanes of traffic, most of it commercial, and most of it bound for the east side of Manhattan, or the Queensboro Bridge, en route to Brooklyn, and using the roadway of Fifty-seventh Street as the connecting link between the two bridges? That this traffic could be routed through any streets to the south of Fifty-seventh Street is impossible, and the park is the barrier to the north. Counts made by our association and by the Police Department indicate that even the present heavy trucking on Fifty-seventh Street cannot be shifted by regulation because the streets immediately adjacent to Fifty-seventh Street are already carrying their burden of trucking and commercial cars. Should twenty million or more cars be added to this burden annually by the construction of a huge bridge?

Plan Opposed in 1926.

"This bridge plan has been considered before, and was opposed by our association for the same reasons that prompt our opposition now. In 1926, the chief consulting engineer of the Port Authority, appearing before our Fifty-seventh Street Committee, outlined objections to the construction of a gigantic bridge at that location. He pointed out that the bridge would have an hourly capacity of approximately 21,600 vehicles, which, he said, would equal the total traffic in a twelve-hour day on Fifth Avenue at Forty-second Street.

"Mr. Drinker, the chief engineer, estimated that the capacity of the bridge would nearly equal the entire north and south traffic movement in the borough of Manhattan. He was emphatic in his warning regarding the serious effect which the tremendous vehicular load to be accommodated by the bridge would have on the streets in the vicinity of Fifty-seventh Street. It was brought out at that time that the interests of traffic in Manhattan would be better served by the construction of a series of tunnels, between the Battery and 125th Street, which would divide the flow of traffic and route it more directly to its points of destination.

"More recent studies have indicated the desirability of connecting the Hudson River crossings and the East River crossings with tunnels under Manhattan as will be the case in the completed East River Thirty-eighth Street Weehawken Tunnel. Midtown Manhattan would not experience much relief from the construction of a tunnel under the East River and one under the Hudson River at Thirty-eighth Street without the connecting link under the streets of Manhattan. The same holds true of the Fifty-seventh Street situation, with the Queensboro Bridge on one side and the Fifty-seventh Street Hudson River Bridge on the other pouring a double stream of truck and commercial traffic across one of the most important business streets in the city.

"Business men, property owners and all the real estate interests in the Fifty-seventh Street district should unite to oppose the construction of this bridge. There is little reason for believing that Fifty-seventh Street and the adjacent streets could stand the burden of truck traffic any better than does Canal Street, or the approach to the Brooklyn Bridge, or the Williamsburg Bridge.

"As an indication of the value in which Fifty-seventh Street is held by those interested in the city's growth, the Board of Transportation has practically abandoned the idea of building a subway link under Fifty-seventh Street from Sixth to Second Avenues because of the disturbance that such construction would cause business and property values."

Building Scarsdale Homes.

Three new English type homes are being erected in the Scarsdale district by the Bagge-Murray Company from plans by George E. Bagge & Sons. Two of these, on Eton Road, will have eight rooms, three baths and two-car garages. Another, on Barclay Road, in the Edgemont section, will have seven rooms and three baths.

WESTCHESTER READY FOR PROGRESS EXHIBIT

County Exposition to Open Next Friday in Community Centre at White Plains.

Development of the civic, social and industrial life of Westchester County will be shown at the Westchester Progress Exposition, which will be held at the new County Centre in White Plains June 6 to 14, according to Major George Featherstone, executive secretary.

One of the features will be a series of historical exhibits to be staged by various communities. D. R. Fox, professor of American History in Columbia University and vice president of the Westchester County Historical Society, is cooperating with the exposition officials in the presentation of these sketches.

Tuckahoe will show British soldiers under General Tryon taking down Wood's Tavern to transport it northward. Mount Kisco will depict the use of Newcastle Church as a hospital for American troops. Chappaqua's exhibit will be of the life of Horace Greeley, and Yonkers will show George Washington calling on Mary Phillips.

Ossining's exhibit will be centred about the fact that The Mount Pleasant Register, the county's first newspaper, was first published at Ossining in 1797. Port Chester will show General Putnam's headquarters; Rye will dramatize the Rye Rebellion, and Mamaroneck will present a tableau in which the characters in James Fenimore Cooper's books will pass in review.

A miniature chlorine plant will be in operation as a part of the exhibit of the Sanitary Sewerage Commission, and engineers will be in attendance to explain the $60,000,000 program of the commission. Maps and models will show where $24,000,000 already has been spent and where the $36,000,000 will go during the next few years, according to Eugene S. Martin, secretary of the commission. The carrying out of this program has been an important factor in the sharp growth of various sections of the county in recent years, Mr. Martin pointed out.

BILTMORE SHORES ACTIVE.

New Features Include Bathing Beach and Wharf.

Realty and building activity is reported at Biltmore Shores, L. I., in preparation for a busy Summer season. The bathing beach in front of the boardwalk will soon be ready for use. The channels to Great South Bay are being deepened and widened for boating. The town of Oyster Bay has let a contract for a wharf at the foot of Alhambra Road on the property recently granted to it by Biltmore Shores.

Sales of property have been made to J. Donhue, William Overt, S. Ruprecht, K. Welts, M. Bonzi, S. Grimald, Philip Curer, B. Michels, J. Walsh, D. Clanty and Mrs. V. Price.

HOME SITES ON SOUND.

Many Localities for Average Wage Earner on North Shore.

One of the notable developments along Long Island's North Shore within the past two or three years has been the effort to bring homesite properties facing the Sound within the economic reach of the average wage earner, points out W. R. Pettit of A. S. Pettit & Sons, local division of the Nassau Suffolk Lumber and Supply Corporation.

As examples, he lists such developments as Wincoma on Huntington Bay, Huntington Bay Hills, Knollwood Beach, Huntington Beach and others which have been made available to home-builders desiring water recreational facilities.

GROUND BROKEN FOR MODEL HOMES

advantage, from cellar to roof. Why, again? Because if we don't the public will note the missing items. The public is educated up to a point that makes any skimping or corner cutting in construction or equipment dangerous. For instance, there will be 160 electrical convenience outlets in this home—twenty-two in the cellar alone. That shows what the public demands now-a-days.

Wharton Clay, commissioner of the Associated Metal Lath Manufacturers, described the better homes movement of Home Owners Institute as "a pipe dream come true."

"By this I mean," he continued, "that when Home Owners Institute began it had nothing but an ideal, as intangible then as a dream. The materialization of that ideal is seen at Stewart Manor today. Not only here but in many other cities of the country realtors have created developments that have made the dream come true.

"Here the public is able to obtain at a reasonable price a house that contains all the best ideas of the manufacturers of nationally advertised products. The home ideal of every woman who pours over newspaper and magazine advertising today can reach its fulfillment."

Among those attending the luncheon and the ground-breaking ceremony, in addition to the speakers, were: S. D. Sewall, General Electric Company; H. N. Brown, Crane Company; A. L. Young, General Electric Company, refrigerator division; R. O. F. Wettergren, International Nickel Company; G. A. Payton, Fain Manufacturing Company; A. B. Lincoln, Home Owners Institute; V. C. Duncan, United States Radiator Corporation; N. J. Driscoll, New York Telephone Company; W. E. Hurley, General Electric Company; J. P. Annin, Home Owners Institute; Wharton Clay, Associated Metal Lath Manufacturers; Joseph Burt, THE NEW YORK TIMES; G. P. Trace, Fireproof Products Company, and A. A. Lakeland, Celotex Company.

Following the ground-breaking ceremonies, Mr. Graham took the party on a tour of Stewart Manor, inspecting several homes recently completed.

The new Master Model Home is of an English Elizabethan influence modified by modern requirements, with an economy of space which in no respect limits its architectural appeal or Old World feeling.

It will be built of common brick and will contain six major rooms, two baths and a first-floor lavatory. Particularly adaptable to suburban landscaping possibilities, its principal outlets are planned for the garden side, into which French doors open at the back. A large outside brick chimney towers above the house, topped by colorful chimney pots.

URGE TAX PAYMENT ON MONTHLY BASIS

Change Recommended in Report by United States Building and Loan League.

BENEFIT TO HOME OWNERS

Committee Regards Semi-Annual Payment System as Poor Economic Policy.

Changes in the general civic tax-collecting method from semi-annual payments to monthly payments have been recommended in a report of the public relations committee of the United States Building and Loan League. The report is signed by Henry S. Rosenthal of Cincinnati, chairman; M. George de Lucas, New Orleans; Fenton B. Truck Jr., New York; John F. Mahr, Oklahoma City; Milton B. Schayer, Denver; Lee C. Stidd, Portland, Ore., and Charles S. Moore, Atlantic City.

Commenting on the report, Willard K. Denton, vice president of the Railroad Cooperative Building and Loan Association of New York, a director of the league, considers that the plan is assured of the endorsement by the league membership.

"There is no reason why taxes cannot be placed on a monthly basis," states the report. "The utility of the plan to home owners is obvious. Instead of being required to accumulate a surplus during the twelve or six month period between any two tax-paying dates, the home owner could make out a check monthly and mail it to the tax collector's office. As a monthly expense it would be on a par with gas, electric and telephone charges and could easily be anticipated and provided for. There would be no last-minute scramble to arrange for a loan from the bank or from a friend or relative, and hence less likelihood of heavy penalties as the result of delinquency."

Monthly Payment Benefits.

An increased "tax consciousness," with a closer citizen supervision of governmental expenditures, would be one by-product of such a system, the report suggests, pointing out that "there may be opposition from the politicians, who will say that monthly bills will entail a much higher collection cost." This objection is met with the suggestion that if such were the case business houses would not depend on a monthly collection basis. The present system, according to the report, is more expensive from the public's viewpoint, since the government loses the use of the money during the between-payment dates.

"Semiannual tax periods are bad in a general economic sense," it is added. "They necessitate the piling up of funds over long periods, and the sudden withdrawal of these funds from the banks, with inevitable disturbance of the even flow of credit. Operating on a monthly budget, City Governments would be much less likely to have to borrow, or to degenerate into the condition typified by Chicago at the present time."

Such a course, the report concludes, would make home ownership more popular, since taxation "next to payment of mortgage and interest, is the largest single expenditure involved in home ownership."

Declaring that the present revenue system of the country is antiquated, having been originally devised for a country predominantly agricultural, whereas at present less than one-seventh of the population reside on farms, the report says that tangible property owners, in particular owners of small homes, bear the greater part of the tax burden.

"Home owning has, in fact, become a financial hazard," continues the report, "because of the widespread practice of levying on real property for the payment of special improvements. A home owner who has budgeted his regular tax to a fair degree of satisfaction may awake any morning to discover that his property falls within the district theoretically benefited by a public improvement that may be one, two or even five miles distant, and as a result his property will be assessed accordingly.

"Very often the individual property owner is not benefited. A new boulevard running past the owner's door, by making remote suburbs more accessible, may cause an actual decline in value."

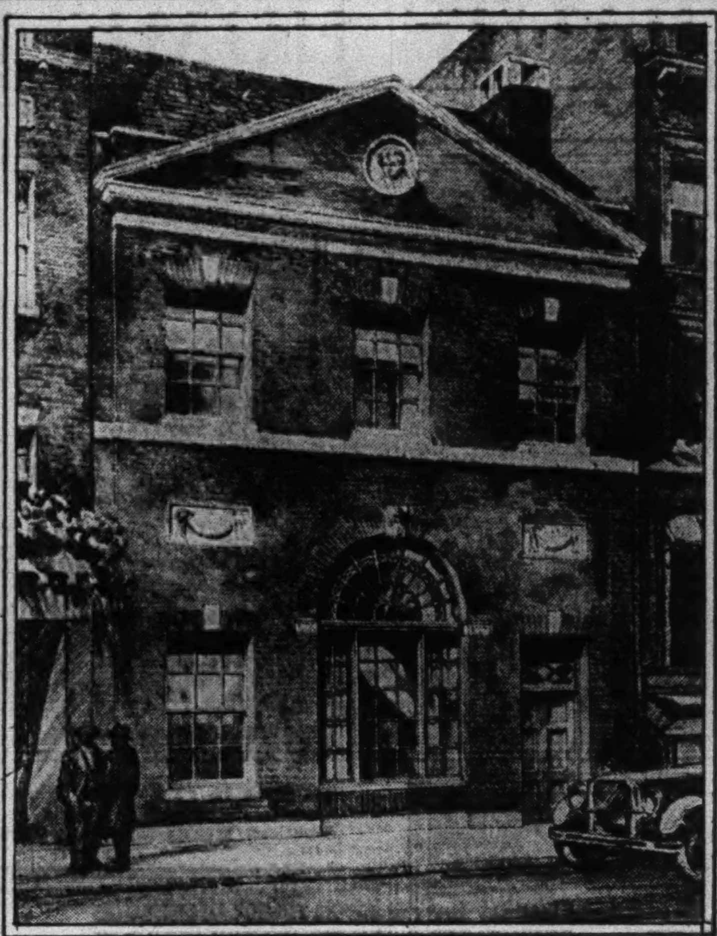
"Property owners whose tax rate will be increased by prospective public improvements should have a major part in determining whether they shall be made.

"The power of protest of the property owners against prospective improvements should, at some point in the percentage of the whole number, be given such effective weight that it could not be overruled except in extreme cases where the welfare of a large community might be at stake."

Jamaica Bungalow Section.

The realty firm of T. I. McNeece, Inc., Jamaica, has taken over a development of bungalows in a growing Jamaica section within a block of a parochial school and near the new $3,000,000 high school.

FIRST BRANCH FOR FULTON TRUST COMPANY



A BRANCH office of the Fulton Trust Company will be erected at 1,902-4 Madison Avenue, between Seventy-seventh and Seventy-eighth Streets, from plans by Cross & Cross. The new building will mark the first venture of the trust firm outside of its headquarters in the Singer Building since its organization in 1890.

The building will occupy slightly more than 30 feet frontage. The façade is in a modified style of Georgian architecture. The second floor will include a large board room, and vault and safety boxes will occupy the basement.

Erection of the branch has been made necessary by an increased volume of business during the past five years, particularly in the section above Fifty-ninth Street, according to Edmund Pendleton Rogers, president. Brown, Wheelock: Harris, Vought & Co. and Huberth & Huberth were the brokers in the purchase of the site.

GOOD DESIGN WANTED.

Prizes Offered for Certificates of Award in Safety Contest.

The committee on accident prevention of the Building Trades Employers' Association has announced a prize competition for designs of a certificate of merit to be awarded to the winner of the safety contest conducted by the association among its members during March, April and May.

This competition will start tomorrow and will end July 31, being open to all draftsmen, artists and designers. The first prize for the best design will be $100, second prize $50 and honorable mention will be given to three other entrants.

"The safety contest which has just ended," said William G. Wheeler, executive secretary, "was part of the campaign of the past three years to reduce building construction accidents resulting in injuries to workmen. It was conducted simultaneously as a subcontest with the industrial contest sponsored by the Merchants' Association. The contestants were general and subcontractors, employing both skilled and unskilled labor in practically all of the various trades engaged in the erection of buildings in the metropolitan district.

"The committee decided to award a certificate of merit to the competitors in each trade group having the best accident record for the duration of the contest. The drawings, to be eligible for consideration, must be in pen and ink, 24½ inches high by 31 inches wide, with a border effect, so that they can be reduced to the standard size of certificates, namely, 12½ inches high by 15½ inches wide."

QUEENS DIRECTORY.

Commerce Chamber Also Reviews Work of the Year.

A directory of more than 2,000 leading business men and organizations in the Borough of Queens is contained in the May number of Queensborough, the official magazine of the Chamber of Commerce of the Borough of Queens, which has just been published.

In addition to the directory feature, the magazine furnishes a review of the past year's work of the chamber, which recently consolidated with the Jamaica Chamber of Commerce and now has a membership of more than 2,500.

President Fred C. Lemmerman, head of the consolidated body, and Howard O. Wood, the last president of the Jamaica Chamber, and Secretaries William J. Russell and Max C. Bunyan of the Queensboro and Jamaica Chambers, describe the various activities in which the organizations have been engaged.

COMMISSION SUIT RULING.

Court Holds Leonett Company Must Defend Suit Claim Alone.

The Appellate Division has reversed a decision of the lower court and has denied a motion by the Leonett Realty Company to make Abraham Weinstein, Irving A. Siess and the B. Edward Crosby Corporation, party defendants with them in a suit by the Wood, Dolson Co. for $5,425 commissions for finding a buyer for the defendant's property. A second cause of action asked this sum as the fair value for services rendered. Justice McAvoy, writing the Appellate Division decision, said:

"Certain other parties claimed commissions involved in the sale of defendants' premises, and the defendants asserted they could not determine, without hazard to themselves to which of the rival claimants the funds were rightfully due.

"The claim of Weinstein, Siess and the Crosby Corporation is based upon a special agreement with the Leonett Realty Company, Inc., whereby a commission was to be earned only in the event of the closing of title. They allege they procured a purchaser, one James A. Kassell, who entered into a contract for the purchase of said property, and the transaction was carried out, title was closed and the commission earned. Thereafter the Leonett Realty Company, Inc., refused to pay the commission on the ground that it had been sued by the plaintiff herein, although an officer of the defendant corporation, it is asserted, admitted that the commission was due to the claimants proposed to be interpleaded."

Justice McAvoy said that the court agreed with the interpleaded defendants that "the defendants have failed to show that the claims are identical and exist by virtue of the same state of facts, and that they cannot determine, without hazard, to which of the rival claimants the funds belong." He continued:

"Such requirements are essential to compel the additional parties to enter the same suit, and where these elements do not exist, the order of interpleader cannot be sustained. The number of items of dissimilarity between the two claims is such as to render their trial together altogether unwarranted."

The court accordingly orders the Leonett Company to answer the complaint.

Avenue C Plot at Auction.

The property at 168 Avenue C, between Tenth and Eleventh Streets, will be sold at auction tomorrow in the Vesey Street Salesroom by Thomas F. Burchill. Next Friday Mr. Burchill will offer two parcels of vacant property on Barry Street, the Bronx.

ADOPT STANDARDS FOR FLOOR AREAS

Leasing Measurement System Worked Out by Building Managers.

APPLIES TO OFFICE SPACE

Plan Will Be Presented to Members for Ratification at Annual Meeting.

Difficulties which have existed for some time among the members of the Building Managers and Owners Association regarding the leasing methods of large and small office units on a square foot basis have, it is believed, been amicably adjusted by the rental conditions committee. Recommendations presented by the committee, of which Lee Thompson Smith is chairman, were approved last week by the directors, and at the annual meeting on Tuesday the members will be asked to ratify the resolutions.

This standard method of floor measurement, as adopted by the committee and approved by the directors, is:

Standard Measurements.

Entire Floors—Areas of entire floors shall be computed by measuring from the inside plaster surface of all exterior walls of space used by the tenant on the floor, including column and corridors, but excluding toilets, porter's closets, slop sinks, elevator shafts, stairs, fire towers, vents, pipe shafts, meter closets, flues, stacks and any vertical shafts and their enclosing walls. No deductions should be made for columns, pilasters or projections necessary to the building.

Divided Floors—Areas of individual offices or divided floors shall be computed by measuring from the inside plaster surface of the exterior walls to the plaster surface of the corridor side of the corridor partition and from centre of partitions that separate the premises from adjoining rentable area, no deductions being made for columns, pilasters, &c. Permanent partitions enclosing toilets, porter's closets, slop sinks, elevator shaft, stairs, fire towers, vents, pipe shafts, meter closets, flues, stacks and any vertical shafts have the same relation to rentable area as do outer building walls.

Stores—Areas of stores shall be computed by measuring from the building line in the case of street frontages and from the plaster surface of other outer building walls to the plaster surface of the corridor side of corridor partitions, and from the centre of partitions that separate the premises from adjoining rentable area. Permanent partitions enclosing elevator shafts, stairs, fire towers, vents, pipe shafts, meter closets, flues, stacks and any vertical shafts have the same relation to rentable area as do outer building walls. No addition should be made for the bay windows extending outside the building line.

Basements—If the rentable area extends beyond the building line under the sidewalk, measure from the curtain wall or finished surface of the retaining wall and from the plaster surface of corridor and other permanent partitions and to the centre of the partitions that separate the premises from adjoining rentable areas, providing such partitions are not bearing walls, &c. If the rentable area is entirely inside the building line, measure from the plaster surface of building walls and from the plaster surface of corridor and other permanent partitions and to the centre of partitions that separate the premises from adjoining rentable areas, provided such partitions are not bearing walls, &c.

In computing operating costs on a square foot basis, the rentable area of an entire building shall be based on the method adopted for determining rentable areas of entire floors. Rentable areas of stores and basements shall be included in the total rentable area of the building.

It is stated that these measurements will apply to New York City office buildings erected after the date of adoption.

ADDITIONS TO HOME.

Two Structures to Cost $1,800,000 for the Home for Incurables.

The Home for Incurables, occupying a ten-acre site at Third Avenue and 183d Street, the Bronx, is constructing two new buildings, to cost approximately $1,800,000, according to Crow, Lewis and Wick, architects.

One will be an eight-story main building, to accommodate 350 patients, and the other a six-story power plant, to serve also as the home for 175 employes.

Eventually the present main building and the old power house will be torn down, giving four buildings as at present. The new buildings are going up on the east side of Third Avenue, between 181st Street and Belmont Place.

The eight-story home will cover a plot 414 by 111 feet in size, and the power plant and staff building a plot 202 by 55 feet.

BRONXVILLE SCHOOL ACCOMMODATES 1,200

Completed Structure Has Forty-five Classrooms and Five-Acre Playground.

The new section which completes the large school building in Bronxville and which now houses not only the elementary, junior high and high schools, but also a kindergarten, has been finished, and practically all of the building is in use. The new structure is one of the handsomest school buildings in the vicinity of New York. Built of brick and stone, and of fireproof construction, it is English Tudor in style, with sloping slate roofs.

The two wings which formerly housed the elementary and high schools have been built since 1924. The architects were Guilbert & Betelle and Harry Leslie Walker. The latter was asked to design the new H-shaped section which links the two former units together, and provides additional space for the elementary and high schools as well as space for the junior high school and the kindergarten.

The new addition was planned by Willard W. Beatty, superintendent of Bronxville schools and the Bronxville Board of Education. The building stands at the corner of Pondfield Road and Midland Avenue, and is attended by about 1,200 pupils.

The structure contains forty-five classrooms, two kindergartens, three art studios, three science laboratories, two household arts laboratories, five shops, a fully equipped gymnasium, two playrooms equipped with basketball facilities, an auditorium seating 650, a music room seating 200, a library with a reading room, and rooms for the high school and elementary libraries, the superintendent's office, offices for the principals and department heads and a large cafeteria.

Back of the school is a playground of five acres which is being laid out with football and baseball fields, tennis courts and a running track.

BERGEN ROAD EXTENSION.

Wide Highway Connecting Hackensack and Hasbrouck Heights.

Residents in and around Hasbrouck Heights, Bergen County, N. J., are looking forward with considerable enthusiasm to the extension of Grand View Boulevard, which, if it is undertaken the Bergen County highway authorities will push to completion as rapidly as possible.

The new section of the boulevard will extend from a point north of Williams Avenue in Hasbrouck Heights Villa into Essex Street, Hackensack, thus linking the main highways connecting Jersey City and Newark with the entire upper portion of New York State. The extension has been eagerly awaited by residents of the vicinity. The boulevard will be ninety feet wide and will be surfaced with concrete.

Recent sales in Hasbrouck Heights Villa have been made to Lulu G. Schmidt, George A. Falter, Charles E. Westcott, Marie C. Leotard, Carmine C. Carino, Mae J. Lass, George N. Schnalk, and Frank G. Grillo.

MORE APARTMENTS IN VILLAGE CENTRE

cently been completed in the same pleasing Colonial type of architecture as characterizes the original structure facing Sheridan Square. The Greenwich Village Inn, adjoining the bank, is gradually assuming its former comfortable appearance. The building was partially destroyed by fire during the Winter, and extensive remodeling has been necessary, both inside and outside.

Just to the east, at the corner of Macdougal and Eighth Streets, a bright coat of green is being given to the old three-story building famous for more than half a century as Gonfarone's. It continued to bear that historic name, despite the handicaps of the Volstead law, until about a month or so ago. Under its new management the lessee of the restaurant has installed a cafeteria in the basement styled the Macdougal Street Tavern, and the upper hotel floors are being remodeled. The old Gonfarone sign has gone, evidently to be seen no more, and some changes are being made in the occupants of the Eighth Street stores.

Just two blocks south is the new sixteen-story Holly Chambers, which will be ready for occupancy in the Fall. This is the largest operation under way this season in the Washington Square area, but it is rumored that before another year the large vacant plot on the south side of the square, at the corner of Thompson Street, opposite the Judson Baptist Church, may be suitably improved with a residential building. That was the site, with other structures, of the ancient landmark known as the Garret, a two-story frame building on the immediate corner. An apartment house project was announced for the plot more than a year ago, but it never materialized.

Repaving Aids Traffic.

The completion of the Eighth Avenue subway in this area is leading to a restoration of Greenwich Avenue from Eighth to Sixth Avenues and the Sixth Avenue section just south of Ninth Street to good traffic conditions. Greenwich Avenue from Eighth to South Seventh Avenue has been entirely repaved, and work is now under way from the latter point to Sixth Avenue. The widened surface of the Sixth Avenue blocks is also being covered and the chaotic situation which has existed there for the last three years is rapidly disappearing.

The new apartment house operation for the northwest corner of Bleecker and Christopher Streets is one block west of Sheridan Square at Seventh Avenue South. At that point is the Greenwich Village Theatre, for which site a tall apartment house was announced a few months ago and then abandoned. The theatre, which was to have been torn down in March, is still there but unused. The Christopher and Bleecker Street operation will remove seven old houses and flats and it is said that demolition will begin in July.

The fifteen-story house will be built by the Silverman, Meltzer-Perlman Corporation and it is expected to have the suites ready for tenants in the Spring of 1931. The plot is a large one, 125 feet on Christopher Street and 96.4 on Bleecker Street, and the building is estimated to cost $1,000,000. It will face the widest part of Bleecker Street.

INTEREST AN ISSUE IN $2,000,000 CASE

Financing of Brooklyn Building Leads to Dispute on Percentage Rates.

FORMAN COMPANY IS SUED

Justice McCook Denies Defendant's Motion to Dismiss Causes of Action.

A novel suit came before Supreme Court Justice McCook recently, in an action by the Court and Montague Street Realty Corporation, owner of the office building, known as 16 Court Street at the southeast corner of Montague Street, Brooklyn, against George M. Forman & Co., Inc., which put out a $2,000,000 bond issue for the plaintiff. Justice McCook denied a motion by the defendant for judgment dismissing the first and second causes of action for $234,185.

The plaintiff alleges that under the terms of a contract made in 1925, by which the defendant was to sell the bonds, it received $1,462,462 and that there was interest of $132,352 and the defendant was entitled to commissions of $170,000 at 8 per cent on the $2,000,000, making a total of $1,765,814, and leaving $234,185 still due. The defendant claims it was entitled to credit of at least $1,960,197 and also alleged that it had paid to the plaintiff or disbursed for the plaintiff's account the entire $2,000,000.

In the particulars filed by the plaintiff, it was asserted that the bankers enriched themselves because the bonds called for 6½ per cent interest and the plaintiff was entitled to only 3 per cent interest allowance, and that the defendant wrongfully delayed the sale of the bonds and refused to segregate properly the money received for the bonds in order to benefit by the difference in the interest.

Difficulties Cited.

Gleason, McLanahan, Merritt & Ingraham, attorneys for the defendant, in asking to dismiss the two causes of action, said that in the first the plaintiff apparently had attempted to set forth a cause of action for fraud and deceit, and had alleged that defendant represented verbally that it had already raised the $2,000,000 for the sale of all the bonds, and that the money would be segregated and set apart for the sole use of the plaintiff, the defendant to receive bank interest thereon at 3 per cent, as a credit against the 6½ per cent due on the bonds. The plaintiff alleges that it would not have made the agreement if it had known the defendant would not carry out its promise, and that the broker profited through retaining the difference between the 3 per cent rebate allowed the plaintiff and the 6½ per cent interest paid on the bonds.

The defendant contended that in demanding $234,185 for false representations in the first cause of action, there were no allegations showing how this damage resulted from the alleged false representations.

The attorneys for the defendant stated that the second cause of action was apparently for breach of contract in that the defendant had performed all the conditions of the agreements as made, and was entitled to the full amount on the $2,000,000 of bonds on which it claimed that $234,185 was still due. The attorneys said that since the agreement with the plaintiff was simply an underwriting contract and the broker was called on to account only for the face amount of the bonds, "it is obvious that if sold at a premium, the amount of such premium could be retained by the broker, and as a result of the provision authorizing the broker to retain any accrued interest received from the purchases of the bonds, as well as from the other provisions of the agreement, it is clear that the broker might at the outset, or at any other time, have purchased all or any part of the bonds itself."

The defendant accordingly contended that there were no facts to warrant the recovery of the money on the ground of fraud and deceit or upon any other theory.

Joseph Nemerov, attorney for the plaintiff, of which Morris White is president, insisted in his brief that both causes of action were properly set up in the complaint, since the plaintiff was deceived because the defendant stated that it had on hand the money for the entire bond issue and the plaintiff expected to get 3 per cent on that money. He said that the plaintiff may even be entitled to a larger sum than $234,000, for which reason an accounting is demanded.

STAFFORD LAWNS ACTIVE.

Thirty-five Homes Going Up in Queens Development.

Stafford Lawns, residential development at Forest Hills, Queens, is showing renewed activity with the coming of warm weather. A new section of the development is being opened with the erection of thirty-five single family houses at Juno Street and Stafford Avenue. Work is due to start this week on a second group of forty-four homes on Baldwin Avenue, between Ingram and Juno Streets.

The two projects involve an estimated expenditure of $720,000, according to the builders, the Kew-Forest Construction Company of Brooklyn. Each home will have a garage. The houses are to be of six rooms, plus breakfast room, and with slate roof.

OBTAINED AS MANY TENANTS FROM TIMES AS FROM ALL OTHER NEWSPAPERS COMBINED

The New York Times:

We are very much pleased with the results of our advertising in The New York Times on our "Greystone Manor" house, 3900 Greystone Avenue, New York.

We used several other papers for the same purpose, and as a matter for our own record we distributed a questionnaire to the tenants of that house. The results of the questionnaire run approximately as follows: The number of tenants directly attributable to Times advertising was equal to the number attributable to all other newspaper advertising combined.

We shall use this criterion on all our future building operations.

WHITE PLAINS LED CITIES IN BUILDING

Westchester Community Had Largest Per Capita Expenditure in Country in 1929.

YONKERS RANKED THIRD

United States Bureau of Labor Statistics Issues Report on Permits Issued in 311 Cities.

Building permit reports covering the year 1929 obtained by the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics from 311 of the 319 cities in the United States having a population of 25,000 or over show the five-leading cities in per capita expenditure were White Plains, N. Y., $250.70; Houston, Texas, $176.61; Yonkers, N. Y., $176.14; Long Beach, Cal., $173.17, and Evanston, Ill., $172.19.

Following is a list of the five leading cities in total estimated costs for the years 1920 to 1929, inclusive.

In the ten years for which data are shown only six cities have appeared in this yearly list of the five leading cities. New York, Chicago, Detroit, and Los Angeles have been among the leading five each year. Philadelphia has appeared in the list each year except in 1921 and 1922, when it was displaced by Cleveland.

New York is the only city among the leading five where the 1929 estimated costs were greater than the 1928 estimated costs.

During 1929 permits issued for new dwellings showed that homes were to be provided for 252,726 families, which is at the rate of 56.2 to each 10,000 of population.

The average cost of all new buildings for which permits were issued during 1929 was $8,689. The average cost of the residential buildings was $11,638. One-family dwellings averaged $4,927, compared with $4,922 in the 310 cities reporting for 1928.

The 275 hotels for which permits were issued in the 311 cities reporting for 1929 averaged $1,034,925 each. This was by far the most expensive class of building. The high average cost of hotels was largely accounted for by the costly hotels in New York.

Plans were filed for 125 hotels in New York City at a cost of $251,495,000, an average cost of over $2,000,000 per building. Apartment houses averaged $73,695 per building.

THIRTY YEARS IN REALTY.

Cadman H. Frederick Recalls Changes on Long Island.

Cadman H. Frederick, developer of real estate along the South Shore of Long Island, will, on June 1, have completed thirty years of dealing in real estate in that territory.

"When, thirty years ago," said Mr. Frederick. "I began selling lots in Freeport, it was an inconsequential village of about 1,200 population. Now, it is 20,000 or more. The business section was not two blocks in length. Lots in the business centre, thirty years ago, were purchasable at $40 a front foot, whereas now they are worth $3,000 or more a front foot, according to location. Home sites, which were only a few blocks from the Freeport Station, I sold for as low as $49 a lot. They are worth thousands of dollars each today and all of them are improved.

"I then followed the real estate movement eastward on the South Shore, at Merrick, Bellmore, Lindenhurst, Babylon and the Parkway-Brentwood-Islip region. Property sold in Merrick and Bellmore in Nassau County, has greatly increased in value and hundreds of homes cover most of the area in which I operated."

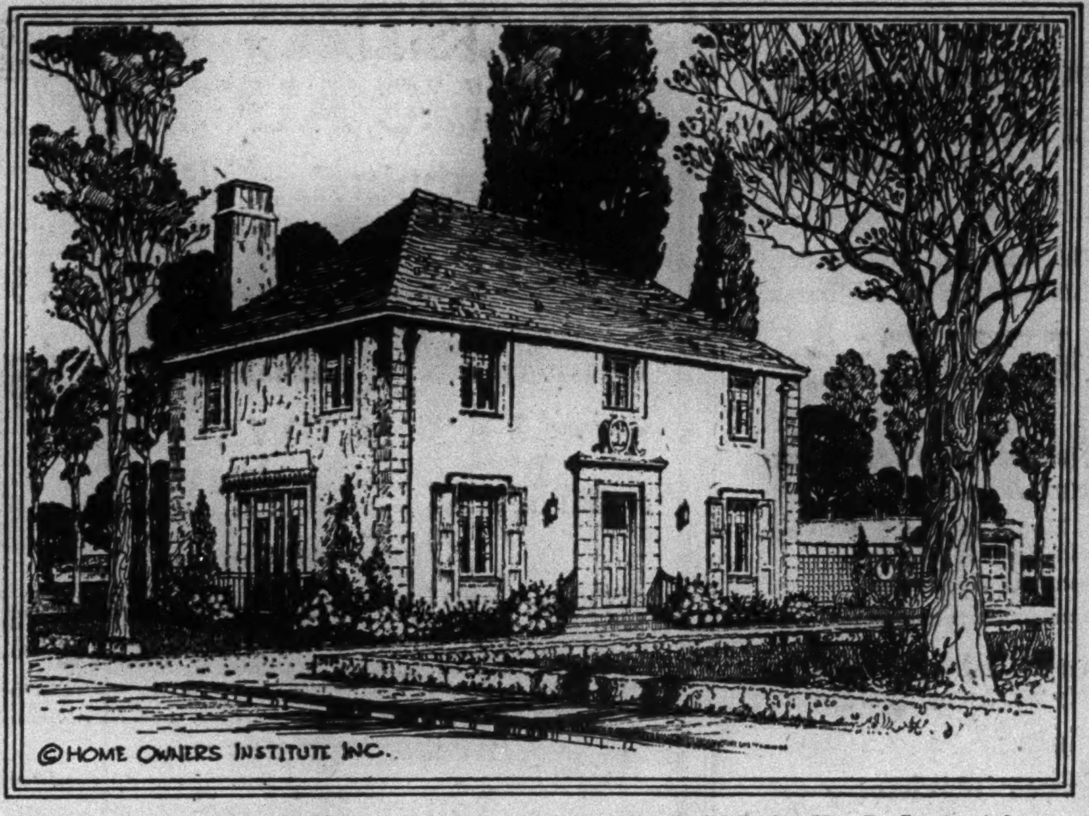
HOME SALES INCREASE.

Title Company Head Predicts Gains for Long Island.

Builders and real estate men are reporting a large increase in the demand for homes and home sites on Long Island, says Oscar Jacobs, president of the Long Island Title Guarantee Company, who predicts a substantial betterment in realty conditions in that area during the Summer.

The improved facilities for commuting to Manhattan and other trade centres are among the chief factors in the continued growth of Long Island, according to Mr. Jacobs. Evidence of this growth, he points out, is to be seen in recent figures showing that 50,000,000 commuting passengers arrive and depart yearly through the Manhattan and Brooklyn stations of the Long Island Railroad.

EXACT SYMMETRY DISTINGUISHES HOUSE DESIGN OF FRENCH ORIGIN



©HOME OWNERS INSTITUTE INC.

Well Suited to Corner or Inside Lot, This Home of French Provincial Design May Be Constructed on a 40 by 100 Foot Plot. Designed by Carlos D. Barragan and Earl Purdy, Architects, of This City, The Dwelling Was Awarded a Regional Prize in Addition to a National Honorable Mention in the 1929 National Better Homes Architectural Competition, Conducted by Home Owners Institute.

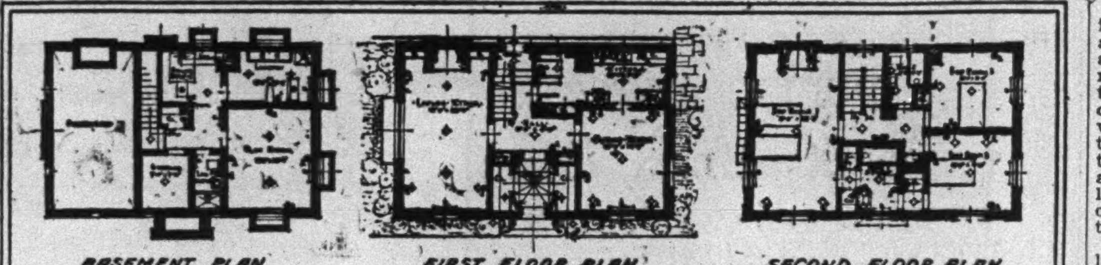
ONE of the larger villages of the French provinces might hold such a house as the dwelling featured today. But although it draws its picturesque exterior design from early French originals this home is planned for modern living in the ultimate comfort which the twentieth century provides.

Certain characteristics which are often found in the Colonial homes of our American forefathers are apparent in the formal treatment of the entrance façade of this residence. Balanced window openings around a central doorway provide the main elements of this resemblance. The main effort in decoration is placed on the doorway and its surrounding frame, making the entrance of principal importance in the façade as it logically is in actual usage.

On either side of this centre focal point the elements of design march two by two. A pair of wrought iron lanterns and wrought iron hand rails are separated by the doorway. Two exactly balancing windows on first and second floors use the door as a dividing point. Finally two copper leaders, one on each of the extreme ends of the house front, produce long balancing lines as the final items in an exacting symmetry.

The chimney is a single note in the architectural mass effect. Ordinarily it would be placed on the side of the house, but since this dwelling presents one side to the street the designers have seen fit to use a large window on the side wall and shift the chimney around to the back.

Two architects collaborated in this design, which was awarded a $500 prize in the North Atlantic States regional contest of the 1929 National Better Homes Architectural Competition conducted by Home Owners Institute and was also awarded honorable mention. They were Carlos D. Barragan of this city and Earl Purdy, member of the American Institute of Architects, also of this city.



Rooms Pleasant as to View and Airy as to Ventilation Are Provided in This Six-Room, Two-Bath Dwelling. On Summer Days Long Shutters on First Floor Windows Make It Possible to Shut Out the Noon Sun. All Three Bedrooms on the Upper Floor Are Provided With Cross Ventilation, and Two Baths Here Are Supplemented by a Shower in the Basement to Assure Against Annoying Morning Bathroom Rushes. Economy in Construction May Dictate That the Space Under the Living Room Be Unexcavated, in Which Case the Basement Is Efficiently Planned to Provide Ample Area for Service and Play Rooms.

Planned for Livability.

Concerning their design the architects said: "A modernized French provincial type was selected for the style of this house because it seemed best adapted to the climatic conditions and in harmony with the exterior surroundings prevalent in the North Atlanti States. Its graceful, simple lines make it economical and easily rendered in actual construction and are adaptable to a variety of materials and localities.

"We believe that simplicity and efficiency must be alloyed with beauty and comfort to make a real home. We aimed at a simple plan, compact, economical and structurally sound, holding in mind always the livability of its arrangement, the comfort of its occupants and charm of its interior, which would afford a variety of pleasant vistas from room to room, as well as to the garden and street.

"One of the primary considerations in developing this plan was to facilitate the housewife's domestic problems. These have been solved by incorporating all modern facilities into a simple and compact arrangement."

A lot 40 feet in width and 100 feet in depth will accommodate this house and the two-car garage which is a necessary supplement to the dwelling in most families. Designed for an inside lot the front of the house faces toward the garage drive and the side with its broad window faces the street. A corner lot would, of course, be ideal for the construction of this distinguished home.

If walls are of masonry the architrave framing the doorway would be of stone as would also the quoins at the corners of the building. But if the house is of stucco on metal lath construction, workmen would mark off the stucco at the corners to simulate stone joinings. For masonry walls hollow tile or cement blocks would form the foundation of these quoins, stucco being applied on them. Whether frame or masonry exterior walls are used both will be covered with stucco.

Individuality in Shield.

Classic French feeling is apparent in the treatment of the cornice over the doorway with its shield or initialed ornamentation. This may be of cast plaster or stone and gives the home owner an opportunity for individual artistic expression either in the choice of a general design or in the selection of some distinctive family insignia.

The door itself is of wood with decorative lights of glass as shown in the drawing. The two steps which lead up to it are of stone if the treatment around the opening is of stone. Otherwise cement will be used. Lanterns with little conical tops set out from the wall on brackets would be particularly effective on this house front. Period lighting fixtures for both exterior and interior use are now available to the home builder through most of the leading lighting fixture manufacturers.

Importance is given the first floor window openings by the recessed panel below the window sill and by shutters which reach to the floor line, giving an impression of height. Four windows are finished with shutters in this way, two on the front of the house and two at the side.

These long shutters will serve a useful purpose for occupants within the dining room, for they will make it possible on very hot days to entirely shut out the noonday sun from two sides of this room.

The roof is of a pleasing type where the eaves extend completely around the house, and the roof itself slopes up from all four walls to meet at the ridge. The resulting roof has four hips running from the four corners of the building to the ridge. This ridge parallels the longer frontage of the house, and the roof section on the narrower side is in the shape of a triangle with the ridge at its apex.

If the building were exactly square, the roof would meet in a peak. This type roof is generally used where attic space is unnecessary, storage provision being made in some other section of the house.

Irregular butt shingles of slate or asbestos will give the wavy lines to the roof suggested by the architects. Ridged roof rolls form a finish to each of the four hips and the centre ridge. Units are obtainable in roofing which fit over each other at the joints to compose a neat ridge roll of this type.

Pink Is Unusual Color Note.

The artistic home builder will find the creation of an unusual color scheme very possible in this house. The stucco of the walls may take on pinkish tones by the addition of mineral color to the mix and the shutters may be painted a deep, warm salmon pink. As the cornice is largely composed of a copper gutter, this section will take on the soft green patina of the copper, making a most effective combination above the pink walls. Also the leaders of copper which come down along the side walls would take on this green hue. Another touch of this metal is seen over the broad window at the side in an awning-like hood. Surmounting this color combination an asbestos roof of variegated colors would be appropriate.

Wrought iron railings and lanterns painted in black lend a contrasting note to this pastel ensemble. A wrought iron railing in front of the long window at the side also is pink and black with polished brass finials atop the posts.

Within the doorway we find a vestibule elaborate in that it is octagonal in shape, with doors on the four opposite and broader walls. Overhead a vaulted ceiling gives an appearance of height. From its centre hangs an ornamental lighting fixture. Radiators are set inside two corners of this vestibule and heat is drawn from them through a grille. Coat closets are provided on each side of the vestibule.

One turns through the hall to the left to enter the living room. One of the vistas which the architects commented on in their statement is immediately apparent from the door to the living room, for one looks out through the broad window directly opposite onto street or garden.

Toward the right on the shorter wall is the fireplace, which will presumably be developed in the French manner in stone or plaster with decorative grilles to provide for the delivery of heat into the room by means of a metal form unit around which the fireplace is constructed. Bookcases flank this fireplace on each side.

Textured walls would be particularly effective in living room and dining room to carry out the French feeling of the design.

Pleasant Dining in Summer.

The dining room is in the opposite side of the house and measures 12 feet by 14 feet 6 inches. Cross-ventilation through two cater-cornered windows will make it a very pleasant place for the evening meal in Summer weather. As already mentioned, the long shutters on both these dining room windows make it possible to shut the room away from the midday sun and open the shutters as the evening breezes come up.

This room overlooks the garden so that the family may enjoy the evening beauty of flowers and lawn. Good wall space is provided in this room for the one or two large pieces of furniture necessary to dining equipment.

Cross-ventilation through two generous windows also helps make the kitchen a comfortable workshop for the housewife. A sink is placed under the window, with flanking cabinets for the storage of china and pots and pans. Directly opposite this sink the electric refrigerator and range are placed on each side of the door from the dining room.

A chimney built inside the house carries off the smoke from the built-in incinerator and heating plant and acts as a division between kitchen and breakfast nook. The breakfast nook in the corner is equipped with table and benches and also with a cabinet for the storage of the chinaware which is used on this breakfast table. Brooms and mops are kept in the closet next to this cabinet and an opening to the laundry chute allows the housewife to quickly dispose of soiled table linens without a trip to the basement laundry.

Stairs to the second floor are well lighted during daylight hours by a large window on the stair landing. On the second floor three bedrooms and two baths divide the space with the master bedroom occupying the space above the living room. As in the living room, a fireplace is provided in one end.

Two closets for clothing open from a passage leading to the bathroom which is equipped with the customary three fixtures. This bathroom is en suite with another bedroom on the floor. As the connecting link between this room and the master room a logical use for the second bedroom is that of a nursery.

Color in Bathroom.

Bathrooms with colored fixtures such as are suggested as possible for these two baths are a still further evidence of modern trends in housing. Even the existence of one bathroom, not to mention two, was never considered in the French prototype from which this house design comes.

Laundry chute opens into the hallway as does the closet for clean linens.

An unexcavated portion is shown under the living room in the basement plan of this dwelling. Such a saving of excavation is logical particularly where rock is found on the property which would have to be blasted out to make a cellar. But if ordinary excavation only is required the cost to more completely excavate the cellar would be only slightly more and would add greatly to the opportunity for comfort in the home in that it would provide a larger play room with a fireplace in one end. Under the present plan a very efficiently arranged basement is provided.

At the foot of the stairs a lavatory with a built-in shower is provided for the enjoyment of those persons who work hard in the garden or take other strenuous physical exercise which is so much better enjoyed if followed by an invigorating shower.

The play room may well act as a rainy day play room for the children or as a card room for the use of adults in the afternoon or evening.

The laundry is situated under the kitchen and a full range of modern equipment is specified with wash trays under the window, an electric washing machine in the corner, an ironing machine on the opposite wall, and a built-in ironing board with convenient outlet near by for the attachment of electric iron.

Trunks and boxes will be stored in the room particularly provided for this purpose and measuring seven feet by seven feet ten inches. A little window lights it so that one will not have to rummage around and also in order that air may circulate.

Automatic fuel, either gas or oil, removes the necessity for fuel storage in the boiler room. In addition to the heating boiler the combustion chamber of the incinerator is located in this boiler room.

Arthur Bates Lincoln, consulting architect, estimates that the 27,000 cubic feet of this unusually compact house may be constructed in the neighborhood of New York City for approximately $15,500.

Information as to costs and when working drawings will be available may be procured by addressing Small Homes Bureau, care of THE NEW YORK TIMES. Please refer to Plan No. 66.

SAXON WOODS HOMES.

Ten Dwellings Under Construction in Westchester Area.

Ground was broken last week in the Saxon Woods development in the White Plains area of Westchester County for a Norman French residence to cost approximately $110,000 from plans by W. Stanwood Phillips. The same architect has prepared plans for Dr. H. A. R. Zehrlaut for a residence to cost approximately $100,900.

Ten houses are under construction in Saxon Woods and plans are being drawn by E. Dean Parmelee for three more, one of which will be built under the supervision of a committee composed of the architect, a master builder and mortgage company representative. This residence will be in the Georgian style of native stone and will contain every modern convenience.

Saxon Woods is developed around the Saxon Woods Hunt Club, one of the fashionable riding clubs in Westchester. The property adjoins Saxon Woods reservation, so that club members and residents have direct access to the miles of bridle paths in that reservation.

GREAT NECK HOMES.

Fifty-five Dwellings Erected in the Spanish Quarter.

In the Spanish Quarter of Great Neck, L. I., comprising the section which formerly was the Baker estate, fifty-five residences have been erected within the past two years, and the development represents an investment of $1,000,000.

The locality is between Station Road and Middle Neck Road, the latter being the main thoroughfare of Great Neck. The homes in the Spanish quarter are of the studio type and range in cost from $13,950 to $16,950. They are all two-story homes, situated on plots 75 by 100 feet.

The houses are of distinct individuality, there being as many as six models. Directly to the east is Manhasset Bay, which enjoys a wide reputation for its motor boat racing facilities.

EAST SIDE COOPERATIVE.

New Seventy-second Street House for Fall Occupancy.

Work is progressing rapidly on the 100 per cent cooperative apartment house being erected by the Fulglen Corporation at 340 East Seventy-second Street, according to the Culver Associates, selling agents. The fifteen-story and penthouse structure has been fully enclosed and occupancy is planned for the Autumn. Breed, Fuller & Dick are the architects and Robert Glenn the builder. Douglas Gibbons & Co. are associate selling agents.

The building represents an investment of $1,400,000. Among the purchasers of suites are John T. Terry Jr., Richard H. Dana Jr., Mrs. Everett P. Wheeler, Miss Winston Hagen, Miss Emily Spackman, and Miss Katharine N. Rhoades.

LONG ISLAND GROWTH.

Telephone Use Showed Marked Increase Last Year.

The growth of population in Suffolk County, L. I., points out Cadman H. Frederick "is reflected in the $31,000,000 increase of assessed valuations in that country for the present year over 1929. Most of this increase was in the western part of the county, which is in the metropolitan area.

"Suburban Long Island—or Suffolk and Nassau Counties—last year showed an increase of 79,000 in the number of telephone calls, or 23 per cent over 1929, added Mr. Frederick. Western Suffolk calls comprised a substantial part of this increase. The town of Babylon underwent substantial structural improvements last year.

"Another barometer of growth in suburban Long Island is the steady increase in the number of all-year commuters on the Long Island Railroad, notably on the electrified part of the Montauk Division along the South Shore as far as Babylon."

QUEENS LOTS IN SALE.

Forest Hills Property at Auction Next Saturday.

An auction sale of 110 business and residential lots in Forest Hills West, Queens, will be held next Saturday by Joseph P. Day in a tent at the corner of Queens Boulevard and Sixty-first Avenue. The land fronts on Queens Boulevard and adjacent streets, including Yellowstone Boulevard, Juno Street, Sixty-fourth Road, Selfridge Street, Sixty-first Avenue and 102d Street, near the Queens subway now under construction.

On the same day Mr. Day will sell seven business and residential plots in Sheepshead Bay, Brooklyn, comprising the block front on the south side of Avenue Z from Delamere to Mansfield Place, near the Sheepshead Bay station of the B. M. T. Brighton subway. Three dwellings are included.

On June 14 Mr. Day will sell for the International Trust Company 245 residential lots in New Rochelle, Westchester County. The plots are at Rose Hill Gardens and front on Webster Avenue, Garden Place and Rose Hill Avenue.

DISPUTES ARISING OVER AIR RIGHTS

Development of Aviation Creates Legal Tangle Involving Fliers and Land Owners.

MASS. AIRPORT WINS CASE

H. W. Smith of Grafton Had Claimed He Was Disturbed by Passage of Planes Over His Estate.

The ancient theory that a land buyer owns to the centre of the earth under his property and to the sky above it has been placed in jeopardy through the development of aviation, and an interesting question of law has arisen through the efforts of some property owners to get redress for alleged disturbance of sleep and peace of mind caused by the passage of airplanes over their land.

"On March 4, 1930, the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts sustained the decision of the lower courts that Harry Worcester Smith of Grafton was really not bothered by planes from an adjacent flying field operated by the New England Aircraft Company traveling over "his land even though Mr. Smith stated in court that the planes not only worried him but also worried his horses," the National Association of Real Estate Boards reports. "The rights of property owners," it alls, "in connection with the future development of aviation will have to be more clearly defined in the near future. At present no one is prepared to say who really owns the air above a piece of land and many conflicting opinions have been advanced by various authorities who realize that the question is due to be settled before many more cases like the Massachusetts one come before the courts.

"Although it has been pointed out by students of the question that legislation against property owners who object to planes traveling over their lands cannot hold because such legislation cannot destroy their title to the air, still Mr. Smith of Grafton must sleep as best he can this Summer on the estate he developed in the country to get away from the city's noise. The Massachusetts courts have ruled that the planes can romp over his bedroom as they have in the past.

"The court stated that the noise of an airplane in flight at an altitude of less than 200 feet was less and shorter than that occasioned by a motor truck, but the Real Estate Association points out that one of the reasons people purchase country estates is to get away from the noise of motor trucks and similar city noises, and that that was probably Mr. Smith's idea in occupying a country estate in Massachusetts.

Finds Planes Annoying.

"The Smith property at Grafton was established about 1893. In 1927 an adjoining property was converted into a flying field. The distance from the plaintiff's house to the nearest point of the flying field is some 3,000 feet.

"In rendering the decision against Mr. Smith, the Massachusetts court said, among other things, that because Mr. Smith was not occupying the air over his property, the State could, therefore, exercise police power over this atmosphere and permit planes to fly there under certain regulations.

"The owner of Grafton called the planes most annoying, but the lower courts of Massachusetts, through a master appointed to preside over this case before it reached the Supreme Court, took the interesting position that the Smiths, living in a modern world on highly civilized standards, for this reason had no cause for complaint."

The master stated that he found the plaintiffs were persons accustomed to a rather luxurious habit of living, and while the noise from the airplanes in flight over their premises caused them irritation and annoyance, yet, gauged by the standards of ordinary people, this noise is not of sufficient frequency, duration or intensity to constitute a nuisance.

The Smith case was decided by the Supreme Court on the basis that the police power of a State permits it to regulate minimum heights at which planes may fly, and that this means when such height is established that planes may fly anywhere. The court, however, considered only the question of trespass and the nuisance resulting from its continuance. The court said that the planes flying over the Smith lands had not interfered with any valuable use of the land and that there had not been "excessive numbers" of airplanes droning over the Smith roofs.

The Massachusetts Supreme Court held that it was not a trespass to fly at an altitude of 500 feet over the property in question but that it was a trespass to fly as low as 100 feet in order to reach or leave an airport. The court held that flights at altitudes of 500 feet did not interfere with the rights of owners, but said nothing about flights betwteen 100 and 500 feet. Yet it was pointed out that buildings in cities often reach a height of 500 feet or more.

OWNER IS UPHELD IN LEASING CASE

Court Finds Oral Promise to Restrict Occupancy Is Not Enforceable.

INJUNCTION IS REVERSED

No Explicit Covenant, Says Justice McAvoy, to Maintain Restaurant in the Building.

An important ruling as to a covenant in a lease has been made by the Appellate Division in a suit by the Henlun Holding Corporation against the Ess Brothers' Holding Corporation. The court decided where it is asserted that upon the execution of a lease, and also at the time of the assignment of the lease to the present tenant, the landlord orally represented and agreed to rent at all times the adjoining premises for restaurant purposes, and it appeared that the tenant occupying the restaurant was dispossessed for failing to pay the rent and the landlord renting the store for other purposes, that an injunction could not be had restraining the rental of the store for any purpose but a restaurant because the promise was oral and accordingly not enforceable.

The decision, which reversed an injunction granted in the lower court against the landlord, was based on an opinion by Justice McAvoy, who said:

"The defendant is the owner of a building on West Thirty-fourth Street, New York City, which it acquired on Sept. 21, 1928. When defendant purchased the property there were several tenants in the premises. One was conducting a restaurant in one of the stores under a written lease granted by defendant's grantor on Dec. 4, 1923, and expiring, according to its terms, on June 1, 1929.

"Plaintiff was also a tenant which was conducting a hotel in an adjoining portion of the premises, under a lease made by plaintiff's assignor with defendant's grantor, on Nov. 1, 1924, and expiring, according to its terms, on Oct. 31, 1939.

"In 1925, when plaintiff took its assignment of the hotel lease, it had actual notice of the terms of the lease under which the restaurant was operating in the adjoining store, and which would expire by its terms on June 1, 1929. A few months prior to the expiration of its term the restaurant tenant ceased paying rent and was dispossessed a few days before the date fixed in the lease for its expiration. According to plaintiff's own papers the defendant then consummated a lease of the former restaurant premises to a tenant in the ladies' wear business.

"Plaintiff thereupon brought this action to restrain the defendant from making such a lease, and moved for similar relief pendente lite. From the resettled order granting that motion, upon the giving of a $15,000 bond by plaintiff, the appeal of defendant arises.

Question of Tenancy.

"Plaintiff first contends that it was represented to the former tenant before the hotel lease was executed, and to plaintiff prior to the time it took the assignment now in force, that a restaurant would always be maintained in the adjoining store. This assertion is not corroborated by the former lessee to whom the original representation is claimed to have been made, and such alleged representations are denied by the former owner of the premises.

"We think these promises said to have been made by the landlord could not be enforced under oral representations made preceding the execution of writings which apparently were intended to integrate the whole transaction. It is asserted, however, that the express terms of the lease imposed an obligation on the landlord to maintain a restaurant in the adjoining store throughout the period of plaintiff's lease. We find no such explicit covenant or promissory term in the lease. But it is argued if these contentions fail that in view of its necessities a promise on the part of the landlord not to rent the adjoining store for any purpose other than a restaurant should be implied in equity.

"Such implication of a covenant not to lease the adjoining store for any purpose other than a restaurant, however, might result merely in leaving the premises untenanted. So plaintiff to meet this exigency argues that a restaurant must actually be maintained in that store. So that the covenant to be implied is one which prevents defendant from leasing the adjoining store for any purpose other than a restaurant, and also requires the defendant to maintain a restaurant there or cause one to be maintained.

"The nature, type and conduct of the restaurant during this injunction order's pendency would of course be under the supervisory direction of the chancellor, who would give direction and instruction by a receiver or some auxiliary of the court to see the mandate carried out as ordered. We think that no such order could be properly enforced, and that it ought to have been refused."

GOING TO CONVENTION.

City Building Managers Leave This Week for Biloxi.

The New York delegation to the national convention of Building Owners & Managers, augmented by parties from New England cities, will go by boat on Wednesday to Biloxi for the opening sessions of the convention on June 9.

Exhibits of new operating devices and rental campaigns will be a feature of the meeting. Among the speakers will be Sidney W. Souers, executive vice-president of the Canal Bank & Trust Company of New Orleans, and Dr. Marion Luther Brittain, president of the Georgia Institute of Technology.

Black Locusts Profitable.

Stanley Mallett, a farmer near Payette, Idaho, is making money in his spare time because his father, thirty-five to fifty years ago, planted black locusts on odd corners of his farm, says the United States Forest Service. Using a small homemade sawmill, Mr. Mallett manufactures the best portions of the locusts into doubletrees, which find a ready market. One black locust made 130 salable doubletrees, besides fence posts and firewood. With a view to growing more trees of the long clear lengths that produce the most doubletrees, Mr. Mallett makes it his practice to remove side limbs from young locusts growing up on his farm, either pinching them off or using a knife.

FINDS USE FOR CYANITE.

Penn State Ceramist Utilizes the Mineral in Burnt Clay Process.

Use for another one of the common minerals found throughout Pennsylvania has been discovered at the Pennsylvania State College, it was revealed when Professor Joseph B. Shaw, head of the ceramics department of the School of Mineral Industries there, explained his new method of manufacturing burnt clay products before the American Ceramic Society in Toronto recently.

This new process, by means of which the Penn State ceramist expects to make road paving in slabs eight by twenty feet, or to stamp out sides of small houses in single pieces, completely reverses the usual clay products manufacturing processes. Instead of forming the object first and then firing it, Professor Shaw fires the clay first and then presses or rolls it into shape. The product is then sent through an annealing furnace to eliminate strains, thus preventing cracking or warping.

This is the method which Professor Shaw demonstrated may make use of cyanite, a commonly found mineral in Pennsylvania which has the chemical composition to make the finest kind of fire bricks, but which has defied all efforts to employ it due to its peculair physical properties. Firing the material before it is shaped solves the problem, the scientist said.

By changing the details of firing the clay so as to exclude oxygen, a well understood ceramic detail, Professor Shaw also produced bricks of light weight and high insulating properties, says a bulletin of the college. Into all three of these materials, he pointed out, the new way of handling clay permits the incorporation of reinforcing iron, which it was impossible to do previously as the heat of firing the clay burned up the iron. The investigation which led to these results was started at the request of W. B. Pine, United States Senator from Oklahoma, for a road-building material "harder than concrete and cheaper than madacem." The laboratory tests, says the bulletin, indicate that these conditions have more than been fulfilled.

REALTY GOLF PLAYERS.

L. B. Elliman and F. S. Bancroft Win Tournament Cups.

Lawrence B. Elliman, president of the realty firm of Pease & Elliman, won the annual handicap golf championship last week at the annual Spring golf tournament of the Pease & Elliman organization at the Clearview Golf and Yacht Club in Bayside, L. I. Mr. Elliman's victory gave him the annual handicap golf cup donated by R. A. Granniss, vice president of the firm. Mr. Granniss was runner up.

The winner of the Pease & Elliman golf cup was Francis S. Bancroft, vice president, with the lowest gross score, and W. E. Crichton was second. W. E. Parsley, head of the Lincoln Building renting office, was awarded the kickers' handicap prize.

Eighty-four members of the office staff attended the outing. Included in the activities were a tennis tournament, a baseball game and a beefsteak dinner. James Elliman won the tennis singles tournament with Ralph Daniels as his opponent in the finals. The baseball game was won by the east side office. Harry Gross of the west side office won the prize as the most valuable baseball player.

SELL JERSEY LOTS.

One Hundred Nutley Plots at Auction on Saturday.

To close the estate of Bianchi & Smith, 100 business and residential plots on Washington Avenue and River Road, Nutley, N. J., will be offered at auction on the premises next Saturday by Major William Kennelly. The property is 275 feet south of the new State highway, known as Park Avenue. The offerings include bulkheaded industrial sites fronting on the Passaic River. Sewer, water, gas and electric facilities have been installed.

On the same day Major Kennelly will sell the three-story frame dwelling, with garage and cottage, on a plot of more than six acres, at 125 South Broadway, Irvington, Westchester County. On June 14 he will sell 400 business and residential parcels at Echo Lake Estates, Mountainside, N. J., and fine industrial and business lots in Newark and Springfield Centre. On the same date he will offer the waterfront property known as Shore Acres at Sound Beach, Conn.

WHITE PLAINS AUCTION.

Eighty Lots in Westminster Ridge to Be Sold This Week.

Eighty residential lots in Westminster Ridge, White Plains, will be sold at auction on the premises next Saturday by James R. Murphy. One eight-room dwelling is included in the offerings.

The property is near the George Washington Public School and fronts on Central Westchester Parkway, which will connect the Hutchinson River, Bronx River and Saw Mill River Parkways. Recreational facilities for the community include a children's playground, lake and community house.

Building Managers to Elect.

The annual meeting and election of officers of the Building Managers and Owners Association of New York will be held tomorrow evening in the Hotel Commodore. J. Clydesdale Cushman has been renominated for president. Members will be asked to ratify the proposed amalgamation with the Real Estate Board of New York.

EASEMENT VOIDED BY FAILURE TO USE

Maryland Court Decides Case Involving Century-Old Farm Crossing.

NEW YORK RULING CITED

Judge Digges Holds That Railroad Right of Way Was Clearly Abandoned.

A decision of a high court on a question of easements on which the law is not entirely clear has been made in a suit involving the division of a farm into two tracts by a railroad right of way, on which, under a law enacted 100 years ago, a crossing was constructed and maintained. Subsequently the crossing was unused for more than twenty years and there was a conveyance of strips of land adjoining the original right of way to the railroad company in fee simple without reservations.

The Court of Appeals of Maryland held that the foregoing constituted an "abandonment" operating as an extinguishment of the easement in the crossing. The decision is in contrast with a ruling by the New York Court of Appeals holding that where there is no intention to abandon, rights of the easement are not lost by non-user alone, and in the case of White vs. M. R. Ry. Co. the New York court said, "The intention to abandon is the material question, and it may be proved by an infinite variety of acts."

The Maryland decision, written by Judge Digges in City-co Realty Co vs. Philadelphia, B. & W. Ry. Co., said in part:

"There can be no doubt that the Baltimore & Port Deposit Railroad, under its charter, was bound to construct and maintain, when demanded, a farm crossing to connect the two portions into which this farm was separated by the right of way, and that such obligation was a continuing one on the part of the railroad and its successors.

"This obligation the railroad company met when the old farm crossing was established, and if the crossing had not been legally abandoned, it would still be under the obligation to maintain it. We think, however, that the record abundantly discloses that this crossing was abandoned long before the appellant acquired the property. It was not used after 1900, more than twenty years before such acquisition, and while non-user for that length of time, in itself does not establish legal abandonment of an easement, yet such non-user, accompanied by positive acts of the owner of the dominant tenement indicating such purpose, will constitute legal abandonment."

The court refers to a previous decision in Knott vs. Summit Park Company in which Judge Adkins said:

"Where a right of way is acquired by grant, it cannot be lost by mere non-user, for however long a time, unless such non-user is accompanied by some act indicating clearly and unequivocally an intention of the grantee to abandon it. It is well-settled, however, that a party entitled to a right of way or other mere easement in the land of another may abandon and extinguish such right by acts of pais. The act or acts relied on, however, to effect such result must be of a decisive character, and whether the act amounts to an abandonment or not depends upon the intention with which it was done. A cesser of the use, coupled with any act clearly indicative of an intention to abandon the right would have the same effect as an express release of the easement without any reference whatever to time."

Continuing his opinion Judge Digges, after quoting various authorities, said:

"It seems clear from these authorities that the act of Sarah A. Knight and her executors in conveying strips of land adjoining the original right of way of the railroad company, in fee simple, without any reservation, coupled with a long non-use before such conveyance, indicates such a purpose to abandon as works an extinguishment of the easement created by the erection of the farm crossing under the provisions of the charter of the Baltimore & Port Deposit Railroad.

"There can be no new right of way of necessity at this time, for the reasons heretofore stated, that the applicant has acquired and now possesses a right of way for the use of the owners of the property on the west side of the railroad, over the lands of Henry Cobb, Inc., to the crossing at Harewood Station. This latter way may be slightly longer and not as efficient for the purposes of the appellant, but that makes no difference when we are considering a right of way of necessity. A way of necessity cannot be established where other reasonable and adequate rights of way exist, and the establishment of which would impose great burden and expense upon the servient tenement."

$10,000,000 FOR HOSPITALS.

St. Louis to Open Four or Five This Year and Expand Others.

With $10,000,000 worth of hospital construction under way in St. Louis for completion in 1930, and five hospitals erected in the past five years at an average cost of $1,500,000, the city is experiencing a phenomenal development of hospital facilities, says the St. Louis News Bureau, backed by civic and business groups there. In the last survey of American hospitals published by the American Medical Association in its March Journal, St. Louis was exceeded in number of Grade A hospitals only by New York, Chicago and Philadelphia.

"During the coming year four or five new hospitals costing more than $1,000,000 each are to be opened," says the service, "while important additions are to be made to others. Practically every hospital for acute diseases in St. Louis has recently increased its capacity or has plans under way to do so. A total of 1,200 beds will be added to the facilities next year.

"The development of St. Louis as an important hospital centre is closely following its expansion and recognition as an important world medical centre under the leadership of the medical schools of Washington and St. Louis Universities. According to a survey made recently by associated health activities, 23 per cent of the patients in St. Louis hospitals were from out of town, and inquiry shows that the percentage is increasing.

"There are approximately 1,200 student nurses in training in the various training schools of the local hospitals, and it estimated about 75 per cent of them are from Illinois, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Kansas, Texas and more scattered States, so that the influence of St. Louis hospitals in the nursing profession of the Central States is extremely active and far-reaching.

"That the students are drawn from a wide territory and that their training is closely affiliated with local hospitals is seen from the fact that of the 536 students in the St. Louis University Medical School, only thirty reside in St. Louis, and the rest are drawn from thirty-one States. Washington University Medical School has 301 students from twenty-eight States, the District of Columbia and five foreign countries. Less than 10 per cent of them are from St. Louis.

"St. Louis Medical School is affiliated with St. Mary's Hospital, St. Marys' Infirmary and Mount St. Rose Sanitarium, St. John's, St. Anthony's and the Alexan Brothers' Hospitals, as well as having one-third of the patients of City Hospital under its care.

"Washington University School of Medicine will own the new McMillan Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat Hospital, the Oscar Johnson Institute and the Radiology Institute, which are under construction. Affiliated with it in the university group of hospitals are Barnes, the St. Louis Children's Hospital and the St. Louis Maternity Hospital. It also has staff relations with Jewish Hospital, St. Luke's, the Missouri Baptist, the City Hospital and City Sanitarium."

WESTCHESTER'S GROWTH.

Census Figures Show Extension of Commuting Area.

Census returns for the northern part of Westchester County, showing a large increase in population, indicate the continued expansion of the suburban commuting area and its extension northward, says Henry A. Lockwood.

"A few years ago the northern part of the county was considered beyond the commuting area," Mr. Lockwood states. "New parkways and improved transit facilities have brought this section as close to Manhattan in point of time as was the lower part of Westchester a short while back. This activity is evident in Mohegan Highlands, on the shore of Lake Mohegan, originally planned as a vacation and week-end colony, but now drawing an increasing number of permanent residents."

MASTIC BEACH PROGRESS.

New Lot Section Is Opened Near Fire Island.

A new section of 3,000 lots in the Mastic Beach development at Mastic, L. I., has been laid out by the sponsors of that community.

The section has for its west boundary the new 250-foot-wide parkway by which the Long Island State Park Commission is linking the Merrick Road with the new Smith Point Bridge over Great South Bay to Fire Island. The southern boundary of the property is the bay separating Fire Island from the mainland.

Purchasers of lots in the new section of Mastic Beach will receive membership in the new Mastic Beach Clubhouse.

Putnam County Acreage Trend.

An interesting illustration of the demand for large acreage tracts, points out Chauncey B. Griffen, was the recent sale of 450 acres in Putnam County for a hunting and fishing preserve. He considers that the trend to Putnam County aptly illustrates the fact that acreage in Westchester is being pre-empted for subdivision and residential improvement.

The Touch of a Master Hand...

ARCHITECTURAL and home-planning genius of the first order finds its highest expression in our 7-room, 3-bath apartment "E". The 30-foot living room has a wood-burning fireplace and with the three exquisite bed chambers overlooks the loveliest part of Central Park. Gallery, living room and dining room, spacious, smart and sumptuously keyed, provide a delightful area for entertaining. Adjoining the luxurious master chamber is a convenient private dressing room and a bath straight from the pages of Vanity Fair. Rooms here are larger than elsewhere with better opportunities for advantageous arrangement of furnishings. Call at 101 Central Park West today and let us show you this gorgeous new-mode suite. ELEVATORS ARE RUNNING and everything is made easy for your inspection. The rental is surprisingly attractive for this particular neighborhood.

SEES NO BENEFIT IN ANNEXATION PLAN

W. B. Harmon Points Out Many Disadvantages to Westchester Communities.

TRANSIT DOMINANT FACTOR

Loss of Good Local Government Likely to Be Serious to County Villages.

Calling attention to the suggestions made from time to time of the possibility of annexing Westchester County to New York City W. Burke Harmon, president of the Harmon National Real Estate Corporation, states that such a war might have disastrous results unless great wisdom is exercised by the suburban populations concerned. He adds that no political considerations whatever should be allowed to determine such a move.

"The one dominant factor that makes annexation to New York City sound so attractive to a suburban population like that in Westchester," says Mr. Harmon, "is the possibility of better and cheaper transportation. There can be no doubt that large areas both of Westchester and Long Island need better transportation service. They need more express service. They need trains that run all night. They need cheaper commutation rates.

"The advocates of annexation regard political unity with New York City as the one sure and certain method of extending the New York subway system into the suburban areas, and obtaining thereby not only a very low fare but a very high standard of service.

"Unfortunately, however, there is serious question whether such a transportation service might not be bought at a very costly price. The political leaders of New York City, would naturally be glad to see some of the wealthier suburban communities added to their fold. The city would have an extensive source of new revenues opened up, many new political jobs would be provided, and the importance of the greater city would be correspondingly increased. On the other hand, there is no guarantee whatever that the annexed communities would benefit proportionately.

Well Governed Communities.

"In Westchester, particularly, the local villages today stand in a very fortunate situation. Self-governed by an electorate of an unusually high level of intelligence, these communities enjoy a minimum amount of graft and a maximum amount of intelligent cooperation between public authorities in the administration of their affairs.

"As a result every dollar of taxes collected is spent with a maximum efficiency for the community maintenance and improvement. Wise restrictions and high-minded community planning and design are seen on every hand. What may be accomplished is evidenced in Westchester, which has been moulded into one of the loveliest residential areas in the United States.

"The Westchester Parkway system, for instance, is years in advance of anything which New York City proper has ever dared to attempt. As for neighborhood planning, a simple comparison of one of the better villages of Westchester with one of the better neighborhoods in Brooklyn or the Bronx provides irrefutable evidence in favor of the local government plan.

"The local village or borough is able to create restrictions in accordance with its own highly specialized needs. It may use picturesque winding streets instead of the arrow-like boulevards and lanes which the city must provide. It can enforce a homogenity of architecture. It can create special facilities in its school to fit the needs of children of more or less superior heritage.

"New York City proper, of course, must devise restrictions and plans and facilities to fit the lowest common denominator of an immense and diverse population. The suburban neighborhood, self-contained, self-governed, self-created, is an infinitely superior entity for all residential purposes. It is to be hoped, therefore, that the suburban centres around New York will not sacrifice their birth-right for the traditional pottage. Granting that with annexation they might eventually secure five cent subway service, they would simultaneously lose much of that valuable character which at present makes travel to them worth while, regardless of difficult or costly transportation.

"Some other solution to the transportation problem than political annexation must be found."

ST. LOUIS HOTELS EXPAND.

3,242 Rooms in 1917 Had Increased to 8,625 in 1929.

St. Louis's hotel industry has increased three-fold in the last twelve years, according to the St. Louis News Service, which is sponsored by civic and business organizations of that city. In 1917 there were about 3,242 good hotel rooms in the city; in 1929 there were 8,625. The greatest increase has been in the larger hotels which show a growth of 225 per cent in number of rooms. Class B hotels have increased their capacity 163 per cent since 1917 and Class C hotels have increased only 69 per cent.

The Lindell Plaza, St. Louis's first apartment hotel, had 100 apartments and was the only one in St. Louis in 1917. There are now about six first-class apartment hotels, which have 964 apartments, an increase of 864 per cent. Another innovation in hotel facilities is the housekeeping unit, of which there are now about 126.

"The hotel, like everything else in modern business," a manager of a St. Louis hotel is quoted as saying, "must now sell itself. There is no longer the hotel which depends entirely on its bar to make money, as some did prior to 1918. With the introduction of prohibition, the modern scientifically conducted hotel came into being. The food is no longer secondary to good drink and gossip; the day of the $60,000 a year commissary has come. A hotel is now almost an economic unit. Last Summer we had a guest who suffered from hay fever. We put him on the fifteenth floor, where no pollen could be carried by the air, and he stayed there all Summer getting service and comfort right here in the hotel.

"Recently we had a guest who was six feet eight inches in height. As our beds are built for persons not taller than six feet, we found it necessary to remove a foot board from the double bed and place a single cot across the foot of the bed for our towering guest. Many hotels are now providing a certain number of rooms for persons of unusual stature.

"During the past ten years hotels have become quite popular for afternoon teas and bridges. Innumerable hostesses who previously entertained in their homes are taking advantage of the facilities offered by hotels for bridge and tea parties."

SPECIALTY SALESMEN TO TRAIN FOR BRANCH OFFICE MANAGERSHIPS.

We are a large, well-financed manufacturing firm. Our product, which is nationally advertised, is an electric labor saving device (not a vacuum cleaner) and is sold to the better class of households, apartments, institutional and commercial buildings. Our field is enormous and a large volume of sales have already been developed by our own men, who are increasing their incomes from 20 per cent to 50 per cent annually. This is your opportunity to get in on the ground floor.

Compensation consists of a substantial commission and drawing account.

Our products do not have to be peddled, and selling them is a dignified calling.

We are now expanding our direct selling organization through opening branch and sub-branch offices in all principal business centres of the country; no road traveling necessary and no investment required, as we finance the opening of office. Territories are of sufficient area to provide for future growth.

You can fill one of these branch office positions if you are a high-calibre specialty salesman between the ages of 28 and 40, thoroughly experienced in demonstrating and selling mechanical specialties direct to the user, and can show a successful sales background.

If you prefer to remain within fifty miles of New York City, satisfactory arrangements can be made.

To be successful requires both intelligence and hard work. Therefore we wish to interview only serious-minded men, who are responsible and ambitious, with an eye to the future. Write, telling all about yourself, your qualifications and products sold during last five years. All communications held strictly confidential. Interview arranged promptly if your letter indicates that you have the necessary qualifications for this work.

MEN.

In the building of a National Sales Organization on a new product, we have opportunities for good men—men who can do things in selling and sales management.

This new product, introduced to the New York market less than six weeks ago, is absolutely a knockout. It is in a class by itself. It is evident that one of the greatest sales records ever made in the history of specialty selling will be made by this hygienic electric product.

I am backing this proposition with the judgment gained from many years' experience in specialty selling, and it is without question one of the best offers of its kind that have ever been made to men who are willing to work for high pay and a good future.

Due to the fact that we are strictly limiting the number of salesmen in each territory, those who get in on a "ground floor" basis will be "sitting pretty." A very high percentage of commission and bonus will be paid weekly to the men who are accepted. For personal interview only,

MEN, SALESMEN, MEN.

WHY are my salesmen making real money?
BECAUSE I employ men of mature age, with proved record of honesty and sincerity.
BECAUSE I am merchandising 7 different properties at prices fitting every pocketbook.
BECAUSE I spend thousands of dollars in newspaper advertising.
BECAUSE I don't expect my men to sell their friend or canvass from house to house.

I FURNISH LIVE LEADS.

I don't care what your job has been in the past. I WANT YOU. See me at once AND EARN good commissions right from the start. Attractive proposition to 2 experienced sales managers.

Now is the best possible time to get into sales work. A few men seeking connection with generous pay with an unlimited market for good products can secure positions with a financially strong company. Men who are accepted will be trained to sell a remarkable disease-removing product providing complete sanitation, which is sold to churches, hospitals, homes, schools, theatres, factories and offices. You are assured of a liberal bonus and commission.

CHARACTER, ABILITY AND SINCERITY.

We know there are still many men who can measure up to such rigid requirements. Yes, even in this day and age when the order of things sometimes makes us feel these qualities are no longer desired. If you feel that you can rightfully lay claim to these exceptional requisites and are willing to offer your record to us, then we know that the task which confronts us will be well on the way toward accomplishment.

We are charged with the responsibility of procuring a limited number of salesmen of the conservative business type, qualified by experience and standing to meet and associate with investors—Men of Intelligence—Real Salesmen. It is to such men that we make this simple appeal with the hope that among the many men who will read this advertisement we will find the exceptional ones which our business requires.

As a foremost requisite, we require honesty, sterling quality and trustworthiness. There must also be some experience in appealing to human nature, and ability to analyze the sales prospect and to present the merits of a worthwhile proposition so that the order will be given as a natural sequence to the presentation of the facts. Sincerity of purpose with a will to succeed, and keeping at it, are among the requirements of this position. We cannot take the space to tell you in detail what we have to offer, but let it suffice when we say that to the real salesman who is sincere in his answer to this advertisement and will take the time

AMBITIOUS MEN
WANTED.

ONE OF THE LARGEST AND MOST POPULAR LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES offers to men sincerely desirous of doing larger things an opportunity to establish themselves profitably and permanently IN ONE OF THE FASTEST GROWING BUSINESSES IN THE WORLD.

Life insurance work is a very important factor in our economic life, constructive, dignified and broad enough in its service to challenge the very best in men. It presents a PRACTICALLY UNLIMITED FIELD FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF A REAL CAREER.

Experience in this line is not necessary, as we will furnish the specific training essential for marked success.

To men who meet our requirements as to character and ability, who may be adapted to our work, will be given an opportunity to earn large commissions while taking our free salesmanship course, plus commission on renewal premiums for several years, thus enabling them to build up a steadily growing income, which may be continued for some years even after they have ceased work.

If you are resourceful, capable and energetic and are earnestly seeking an opportunity for larger growth—

Call at our office between 10:30 and 3, or write for particulars, giving your address, including telephone number.

Houses—Queens & Long Island.

ROCKVILLE CENTRE, L. I.,

I consider and recommend today's offering as a great bargain; seldom do you see an opportunity such as this advertised.

Spacious living room, 12x23, with real log-burning open fireplace, three-tone panel decorations (pastel shades). French glass doors and guest closet, sun porch, southern exposure, 7x13; has 8 large windows.

Large dining room, 11x15, green tint paneled walls, bay window extension, and the kitchen the delight of any modern housewife. Colorful and cheerful; an 8-foot double kitchen dresser with leaded stained glass doors. A colored cabinet, Clark Jewell gas range with vent pipe and Loraine oven, regulated, built-in ironing board and double drain sink with new style faucets.

Breakfast room, green porcelain top table with Windsor back chairs, built in (inside flower box filled) wall radiator.

Laundry room, porcelain tub, refrigerator space, downstairs lavatory.

Open stairway to second floor, four cheerful sleeping chambers; master chamber has separate dressing room, 7x7.

Colored tiled bath, standard built-in fixtures and shower, window drapes and shower curtains to match.

Stairway to spacious attic, floored and partly walled.

Large basement, American radiator, steel jacketed boiler. All pipes wrapped. Gas hot water coil. Save-U-Time electric push bottom in kitchen and bath (automatic hot water control), ¾ oak floors with inlaid border. All windows and doors metal weather stripped. electric signal bells. Holland linen shades, three separate entrances, open front and rear porches, window flower boxes.

Garage 14x18, underground wiring, electric lights and vacuum connection. Cement apron and runways.

Home located on a generous size plot in one of the finest, restricted, residential sections of Rockville Centre, grounds landscaped and shrubbed, front and rear lawns, rose trellis, rock garden, bird bath and fish pond.

Home is exceptionally well built, attractive in architectural design and color scheme.

Why do you suppose it is offered at such a ridiculously low price? Because it must be sold quickly, immediately. The first mortgage is $5,750; the total price is $8,950; a responsible party may arrange very convenient terms.

This is an opportunity which you will greatly appreciate upon investigation. Can be inspected today or during week; you will not be asked to buy.

MAURICE S. GOODMAN ASSOCIATES

Less than a year ago we sold a perfectly charming new home in the Manor Woods section to a client who now desires a larger place in the same beautiful section. So we are offering his tastefully decorated home of 7 large rooms and 3 tiled baths at a price of $24,500, which we know to be most conservative. It is a house of English type in stucco and half timber standing on a wooded hill, with a picturesque stone doorway. Some of its features are an open porch, slate roof, hot-water heating, 2-car built-in garage, and a beautifully landscaped plot, only 7 minutes' walk from Hartsdale Station and shops. We would like to show you this lovely place. It can be bought on very easy terms.

SUMMER RENTALS from $200 to $5,000.

$15,000—A stone and clapboard Colonial, high up where the breezes live. The living room with stone fireplace and three exposures, dining room, guest lavatory, half-tiled kitchen, with up-to-the-minute appointments, make a most livable first floor. Upstairs, three bedrooms with cross draught, two bathrooms in gayly colored tile, one with stall shower, and more than the usual closet space. A built-in garage. Really remarkable value.

All the romance of a feudal eyry clinging to the face of a cliff, within ten minutes' walk of the station! Stone-flagged entrance hall, two steps down to a large, beamed-ceiled living room with leaded-glass doors giving upon a huge, awninged stone terrace commanding a charming view, dining alcove and snug kitchen and pantry with electric refrigerator. Up the attractive stairway to two charming bedrooms, dressing room and green tiled bath with stall shower. Embowered in trees. Oil burner and large built-in garage.

Owner moved to England, must sell at once. A home of an artist, reflecting within and without the beauty of his creative thought. An English brick cottage: a wide view of distant hills, a broad terrace and formal garden stretching away to a grove of slender young trees. Within, lovely colors of walls and draperies, interesting French papers that enhance the charm of beautifully proportioned casement windowed rooms, a stunning setting for the possessions of a lover of the beautiful. 5 bedrooms, 3 baths, maid's room and bath. Price $30,000.

A booklet and road map sent upon request.

WHITE PLAINS.
Charming French Villa
in a delightful Westchester setting.
Owner leaving for France is anxious to make quick sale.
If you have ever traveled in France, how often have you recalled with a thrill of pleasure those charming stucco villas with their heavy tiled roofs and picturesque shutters that dot the countryside.
Nestling in the midst of a majestic group of age-old trees, with trailing vines and trellises, quaint, old-fashioned flower gardens with their flashing brilliant colors, the delightful little vegetable garden with its trim rows of growing plants, and over all a brooding quiet air of restful beauty.
This lovely Westchester home is typical of the French villas which inspired it. There are 4 bedrooms, 2 baths; 2 servants' rooms and bath. A beautiful solarium.
Convenient to White Plains Station.

IN THE ENGLISH MANOR TRADITION.

Here is the charming setting—a miniature estate situated on a grassy knoll, among towering trees that shade the house—insuring coolness during the warmest weather. Well planned and carefully built, with thought as to comfort and practicability. The windows look out on gardens, rolling green lawns, and through the trees distant vistas of the Hudson River. Containing three master's bedrooms with two baths, as well as a maid's room and bath. A tiled sun terrace off the living room is especially attractive for Summer and Fall use.

Those who wish to build their own homes may purchase sites—several facing the Hudson—from 1-3 acre up. We can assist in financing.

The sports club, with swimming pool and tennis courts, is now open to residents.

CANADA'S HYDRO-ELECTRIC PROGRESS

Recent Accomplishments and Future Programs Outlined by the C. P. R.

5,727,600 H. P. INSTALLED

Activities in Next Three Years Will Add 1,600,000 Horsepower, Says Railroad.

The steady growth of water power development witnessed throughout the Dominion during the last few years was substantially maintained during 1929, with practically every Province represented in the program of activities, says a recent Canadian Pacific Railway bulletin. The total capacity of new installations brought into operation amounted to 378,400 horsepower, bringing the total installation for the whole Dominion to a figure of 5,727,600 horsepower, adds the railroad.

"There are as well a number of important undertakings under active construction which, according to the program proposed, will add more than 1,600,000 horsepower to this total during the next three years," the bulletin continues. "In many of these undertakings an initial installation only is involved, and when they are ultimately completed to their full designed capacities a further 1,500,000 horsepower will be added to Canada's total. In addition, a number of important projects are under active study, some of which will undoubtedly materialize during the next few years. It is apparent, therefore, that the rate of growth in recent years will not only be maintained, but will be considerably increased.

"The capital expenditure involved in the development, transmission and distribution of this new power represents a considerable proportion of the total expenditure in building construction in Canada, the 1929 outlay involving probably more than $75,000,000, while not less than $320,000,000 is likely to be required to complete the undertakings arranged for the next three years.

British Columbia.

"With the construction actually under way in 1929, and the projects under investigation for early development, hydroelectric activity in British Columbia is the greatest in the history of the Province. The largest of these activities include developments under way or in prospect by the various subsidiaries of the British Columbia Power Corporation, the West Kootenay Power and Light Company, the East Kootenay Power Company and the Powell River Company.

"Among the subsidiaries of the British Columbia Power Corporation, the Vancouver Island Power Company completed and placed in operation during 1929 a 2,000 horsepower installation at its Jordan River diversion dam. This small plant is fully automatic. At the main Jordan River Power Station plans have been prepared and work commenced on the installation of a fourth unit of 18,000 horsepower capacity which it is expected will be in operation in 1930. The same company has investigations in progress, which will be continued during 1930, in connection with the development of a large power site on the Campbell River for the supply of future power needs on Vancouver Island.

"A second subsidiary, the Western Power Company of Canada, commenced active construction during March, 1929, of the initial stage of an ultimate 188,000 horsepower development at Ruskin, on the lower Stave River. This development includes the reconstruction of the company's Stave Falls Railway; the building of a concrete dam 180 feet in height; two tunnels of twenty-one feet in diameter, and a power station to accommodate two 47,000 horsepower units, one of which is to be in operation by the Autumn of 1930. This power will go to increase the supply to the Vancouver district.

"A third subsidiary, the Bridge River Power Company, continued the construction of its undertaking on the Bridge River, the program for which has been altered somewhat, due to the placing under construction of the Ruskin development. The Bridge River tunnel is being enlarged to an inside diameter of 14 feet 3 inches, and two miles have been completed. This part of the undertaking, including the concrete lining, is expected to be finished by July, 1930. The initial development may be increased to 80,000 horsepower instead of the 56,000 horsepower originally planned, and will come into operation in 1932. The transmission line, which will carry the power to the Vancouver district, will be 220,000 volts, instead of the 154,000 volts, as originally arranged.

"The West Kootenay Power and Light Company brought No. 3 generator of its 75,000 horsepower plant at South Slocan into operation in June last, thus completing this development. The same company has made extensive field surveys preparatory to the early development of a 40,000 horsepower plant on the Adams River, from which power will be transmitted to the company's system via the Okanagan Valley. Field surveys have also been made and plans are now being prepared for the utilization of the complete head available in the Pend d'Oreille River from the international boundary to a point four miles from the mouth.

"At Upper Bonnington Falls on the Kootenay River the city of Nelson added a 3,000 horsepower unit to its plant during the year; and at Shuswap Falls on the Shuswap River the West Canadian Hydro-Electric Corporation brought its 3,800 horsepower installation into operation during June, supplying energy to the towns of Vernon, Armstrong, Enderby and Salmon Arm. The Powell River Company has recently acquired rights on the Lois River, and surveys are being carried out in anticipation of the development of about 18,000 horsepower for use in the company's pulp and paper mill at Powell River.

In Alberta.

"In Alberta the Calgary Power Company completed and brought into operation in October its 36,000 horsepower development at the Ghost site on the Bow River, about thirty miles west of Calgary. The company also extended its transmission systems throughout the Province, bringing hydro-electric energy to Wetaskiwin, Camrose, Lacombe, Cardston, Pincher Creek, Macleod, the Turner Valley, and numerous smaller municipalities. An agreement was also made with the city of Edmonton for an interchange of power, and a 132,000-volt transmission line will be completed early this year to carry 175 miles from the Ghost development to Edmonton.

Saskatchewan's Progress.

"Good progress was made in the construction of the first hydro-electric plant to be erected in Saskatchewan. This development, which is being made by the Churchill River Power Company, is situated at Island Falls, on the Churchill River, and is designed to include six units of 14,000 horsepower each, three of which will be initially installed. The plant is expected to come into operation in the Autumn of 1930.

Manitoba's Development.

"In this Province, two large hydro-electric undertakings are under construction on the Winnipeg River, the first at Seven Sisters Falls by the Northwestern Power Company, a subsidiary of the Winnipeg Electric Company, and the second at Slave Falls by the city of Winnipeg. The former project will ultimately comprise an installation of six units of 37,500 horsepower each, operating under a head of 66 feet. The initial installation will consist of three units operating under a head of about 40 feet, which will later be increased in two stages, first by the construction of dykes enclosing the head pond, and secondly, by the excavation of the tail race-rock cut. It is expected that the initial installation will be in operation by July, 1931. Upon the completion of this development, the Winnipeg Electric Company will abandon its 37,800 horsepower plant on the Pinawa Channel and the whole flow of the river will be utilized at Seven Sisters.

"The Manitoba Power Commission extended its transmission system by the erection of 198 miles of new lines and service was brought to the following municipalities: Cartwright, Killarney, Boissevain, Baldur, Wawanesa, Pipestone, Reston, Melita, Elkhorn and the new provincial prison farm near Headingly.

Ontario's Undertakings.

"In Ontario, installations totaling 48,750 horsepower were added during 1929, while other undertakings in progress will increase the Province's total by 123,000 horsepower during 1930. There are also other developments proposed for early commencement. New developments completed during 1929 included the 28,200-horsepower plant of the International Nickel Company of Canada at the Big Eddy dam on the Spanish River, and one of the Algoma District Power Company at High Falls on the Michipicoten River, with an initial installation of 11,000 horsepower, the power being carried over a transmission line extending from the plant to Sault Ste. Marie. The town of Chapleau also completed a new development of 550 horsepower in two units of equal capacity.

"The Ontario Hydroelectric Power Commission completed three new developments during the year, one with an installation of 2,200 horsepower at Trethewey Falls, on the South Muskoka River, to supplement the supply to the Georgian Bay system; another at Elliott Chute, on the South River, with an installation of 1,800 horsepower, to supply the Nipissing system, and a third with a 5,000 horsepower installation at the power storage dam at Lower Ear Falls, on the English River.

"In the Cobalt mining district the Canada Northern Power Company began the construction of a 13,000 horsepower development at the Lower Notch, on the Montreal River. This undertaking is to be completed during the present year, and the power will go to supplement that supplied by the company's numerous other developments.

RAILROAD SURVEYS HOME RESOURCES

Canada's Progress in Several Directions Recorded by C. P. R.

PETROLEUM DEVELOPMENTS

Bulletin Stresses Rapid Increase of Tourists—They Bring In $300,000,000.

Land, forestry, mining, water power, the development of the North—progress in these is fundamental to Canada's national prosperity, and a survey of activities during the last year, recently completed by the Canadian Pacific Railway, shows that there has been a further substantial advance in almost every direction over that previously recorded, according to a bulletin of the railroad.

"First in the list of natural resources stands the vast total area of fertile land," it continues. "In taking up land for farming purposes men not only show their faith in the country but by this act and what follows they increase the country's production and prosperity.

"Much is being done by government departments, as well as by private individuals, in the administration and development of Canada's mineral resources, and scientific and investigation work calculated to assist the mining and metallurgical industries throughout the Dominion has been carried on unceasingly. The extensive metalliferous deposits of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, which have attracted international attention for the last few years, have encouraged prospecting operations on a wide scale. But progress has not been limited to any one section of the country. In all parts of Canada increased activity has been manifested in mineral development, and conservative official estimates of the total production for 1929 are placed at about $300,000,000, or about 15 per cent above the record established last year.

"The Alberta petroleum and natural gas resources have now been developed to the point where they are no longer considered to be of problematical value but are classed among the great wealth producers of the country. The total production of naphtha, light crude and heavy crude oils has now reached an annual total of well over 1,000,000 barrels, an increase of 105 per cent over last year.

"Canada's forest industries continue on a high level of activity. A number of steps have been taken in the year to still further promote that progress. The most important of these is the arrangement arrived at by which the Provinces and the Dominion will cooperate in the work of making a detailed inventory of Canada's forest resources.

"Each year the industries dependent for their raw materials upon the forests call for greater supplies. The value of the production for the group of manufacturing industries using wood and paper as their principal component materials was in round figures $630,000,000 for 1927, the last year for which complete returns are available. This compares with $600,000,000 for 1926 and $557,000,000 for 1925. Nevertheless, Canada has sufficient readily accessible forest land to produce in perpetuity several times the present annual cut, and to sustain forest products industries of much greater capacity than exists today, provided preventable losses and unnecessary waste are overcome.

"Water power, which has given such impetus to Canada's industrial life, has developed to an extent that a few years ago would have been considered phenomenal. The new construction during the year brought the total installed horsepower to 5,727,600. This is an increase of 7 per cent for the year, and the completion of work now in progress will, in three years, add about 28 per cent to the present total. The cost of this year's construction was, in round figures, $75,000,000, and for the coming three years will be more than four times that amount. Developments cover practically all the Provinces and all lines of industry, with a marked widening of the use of power in the domestic, municipal, mining and agricultural fields.

"The business created by the influx of tourists, which only a few years ago was insignificant, has now risen to the proportions of a major industry. The number of tourists entering Canada was larger in 1929 than ever before, and the total value of the trade has been estimated at over $300,000,000. And, this is not the whole benefit that the Dominion receives. Canada has so much to offer that every tourist is a probable investor and a possible settler; in any event, he becomes a better friend of this country than before, which means much to every Canadian interest. A pleasing feature of this trade is that it is in its infancy, and much of the work carried on for the benefit of Canadians tends to attract tourists. Canada's national parks, which are being constantly improved, have now a world-wide reputation and draw yearly increasing throngs of seekers after health and pleasure. The setting aside of bird sanctuaries, shooting grounds and historic sites, and the development of sports, has also added to Canada's great drawing power.

"Surveying these broad fields of endeavor, it is impossible not to see how great have been the strides and steady the advance in the year just closed; and, how strong are the grounds for a sane and reasoned optimism as to the progress of the Dominion in the year that has just begun."

The demand for quarter sections, each of 160 acres, of free homestead land in Western Canada, which are given by the Dominion Government to settlers, continues to increase, according to a government bulletin issued recently. In the first three months of this year there were 2,564 entries registered, representing 410,240 acres, compared with 2,405 entries, representing 364,000 acres, in the corresponding three months last year. Of this year's entries, 108 were in Manitoba, 929 in Saskatchewan, 1,420 in Alberta and 107 in the Railway Belt and Peace River Block, British Columbia. The largest number of entries were made in the Prince Alberta-Sackatchewan district, a total of 409. The Edmonton-Alberta district was second with 277 and the Peace River district third with 145. The Canadian Government requires a registration fee of $10 to be paid by each settler to whom a quarter section of homestead land is granted, and the settler must do a certain amount of cultivation and fulfill other requirements as to residence, &c., within three years. These homestead lands are now for the most part at some distance from railways, but with the rapid advance of settlement and good roads are in increasing demand.

TRACES THE SPREAD OF FIVE-DAY WEEK

Bank Says Practice Probably Has Been More Generally Accepted Than Is Recognized.

LARGEST GAINS ARE HERE

Number Working on That Schedule Throughout the Country Now Put at 650,000.

The five-day week has probably been more extensively adopted than is generally recognized, and the movement seems to be spreading, says the New York Trust Company in a survey of the movement to reduce hours of labor in this country.

While it is impossible, the bank says, to predict how extensively the five-day schedule will ultimately be applied, or even whether the many economic and social questions involved will permit of its general application, the experiment, though limited in scope, has in actual operation justified its use in certain cases and in others warrants serious consideration.

"In 1928," says the bank, "according to reports of the American Federation of Labor, some 165,000 of its members were working under a schedule of forty hours per week. Figures published somewhat later by the National Industrial Conference Board with reference to manufacturing industries and building trades gave the number of five-day workers as 400,000. In May, 1929, 150,000 workers in the building trades in New York City went on the five-day schedule. On the basis of these figures, together with estimates covering other activities of less importance, it is now estimated that the number of workers operating under the five-day schedules approximates 650,000. This figure, while substantial, still represents less than 3 per cent of our wage-earning population, and 200,000 of the persons included in it are employed in the Ford factories alone."

New York in the Lead.

It is pointed out that 70 per cent of all manufacturing industries where the five-day week schedule is in operation are located in New York City, and adds:

"Those employers favorable to the plan regard the half day of work on Saturday as uneconomical and unsatisfactory, for the reason that attendance is apt to be irregular, the application of workers relatively poor and production generally lower per hour than on other weekdays. They also argue that to close down production for a full day on Saturday allows time for thorough inspection of the plant and machinery, and for maintenance and repair work, without interfering with production. They feel, too, that for industries generating their own power the operation of power plants for a half day is uneconomical. Some employers believe also that an extra day of rest for labor results in greater efficiency through the working week.

"From the employe's point of view, the short week is desirable because of the additional time it gives him for leisure, recreation, study or other purposes. If he can work on a five-day schedule without reduction of his weekly income, his advocacy of it, in which he is strongly supported by the American Federation of Labor becomes generally assured.

"Adoption of the five-day plan, however, involves consideration both of wages and working hours. Either the plant may be closed entirely on Saturday with no change in the hours worked on other weekdays, which may mean decreased production, or the hours formerly worked on Saturday may be redistributed in whole or in part over the other days of the week. Likewise weekly wages may be reduced in proportion to the reduction in working hours, or they may be kept at their original level, thereby tending to increase unit costs.

Quotes from Survey.

"Actual accomplishments in the matter of rearranging working hours in 217 establishments are demonstrated by a recent survey made by the National Industrial Conference Board, and covering a total of 270 manufacturing industries that have adopted the five-day week. This shows that while a few companies continued to operate the same number of hours per week as previously, a large majority reduced the actual working time per week in changing to the five day-plan. Of the plants included in the survey, prior to the adoption of the five-day schedule, a forty-four-hour week was in effect in the largest group, a forty-eight-hour week in the next largest and a fifty-hour week in the next largest. With the adoption of the new schedule these figures were reduced to 40, 44 and 48 respectively.

"In general, wages were not reduced in proportion to the reduction in working time. Of the 151 companies reporting their policy in regard to wages, 62 reported no reduction of working hours and accordingly no reduction in wages. Of the remaining 89 companies, all of which had reduced the number of working hours, 53 continued to pay the same wages paid under the old schedule and 28 reduced wages in proportion to the reduction in working time. That is to say, about 59 per cent of the companies which reduced the number of hours worked per week made no reduction whatever in the weekly wage.

"Industrial leaders and employers engaged in manufacturing operations will naturally be interested in the effect of the five-day schedule upon costs and production. Sufficient data are not available to measure accurately its effect on unit costs."

Hints on Cooking Lamb.

The fell is the thin papery outer covering on the lamb carcass. Although recipes frequently advise that it be removed before cooking, it is now believed, says the United States Bureau of Home Economics, that flavor is not affected by the fell. Leg of lamb keeps its shape better if cooked with the fell, but shoulder, saddle, and chops are improved by its removal. Unless a roast from which the fell has been removed is rubbed well with flour, it will require longer to cook than a piece with the fell undisturbed, says the bureau.

HOW TO RAISE CHICKS.

Proper Rate Is the Main Factor, Says Jersey Specialist.

Intensive commercial methods in raising chicks have not been without their drawbacks, since the necessary forcing has resulted, to some extent, in cannibalism, toe-picking and many other vices. When chicks were brooded in fewer numbers and according to older ideas, many of the present-day troubles were virtually unknown. However, pullets free from harmful vices can be produced even under present-day methods, if certain essential rules are followed, according to L. M. Black, New Jersey extension poultry specialist.

The first of these is a suitable ration. Too many poultrymen judge a ration by the growth of cockerels at market age. To one interested in egg production, however, the objective should be growing pullets and not broilers. The separation of cockerels from pullets as soon as sexes can be distinguished is another important step in avoiding trouble. By following this practice pullets can be grown to greater advantage and their development can be evenly distributed throughout the season. Crowding during the growing season is, in a large measure, responsible for the appearance of brooder vices.

The poultryman should endeavor to provide conditions as nearly as possible like those once provided under the older method of free range breeding. Then chicks were allowed to run out on the range at an early age, and much more comfortable conditions were thereby available. Exposure to varying degrees of heat and cold resulted in better feathering than is common today and there was little or no cannibalism.

Most progressive poultrymen today, Mr. Black says, are obtaining best results by using the two-room system of brooding. The chicks are trained to the source of heat, but all feeding and exercising is done in a comparatively cold atmosphere. The result is greater activity and less picking.

Finally, necessary changes in management should be made gradually. The effect which any sudden change may have upon the habits and feed consumption of the birds cannot be too carefully studied if troubles are to be avoided, Mr. Black warns.

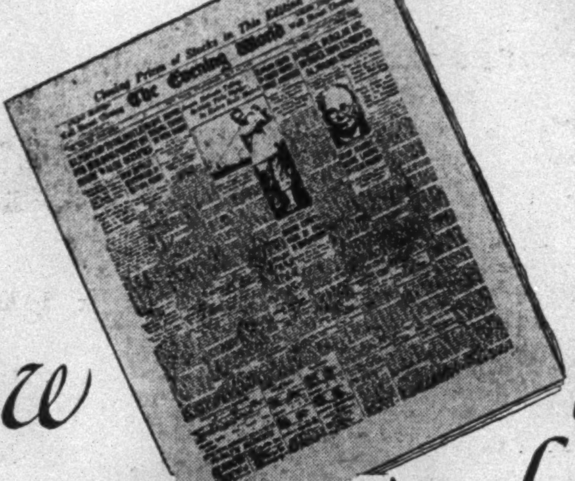
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISERS



can now add the powerful Evening World for only 10 cents per line

FOR nearly half a century THE WORLD has been known as "America's Greatest Want-Ad Medium." It has developed the small classified advertisement to a point where there is hardly a household need that cannot be supplied, a personal problem that cannot be solved, through this powerful form of newspaper advertising.

In order that this service may be further extended and classified advertising made to serve more efficiently than ever the wants of Greater New York, the columns of THE EVENING WORLD will be thrown open on Monday, June 2, to classified advertisers in THE MORNING WORLD at an additional cost of only 10 cents per line. This offer is restricted to advertisers who deliver their copy for THE EVENING WORLD by noon of the day preceding its appearance in THE MORNING WORLD, in order that it may catch all editions of THE EVENING WORLD beginning with the 3 P. M. edition, providing an additional circulation of 200,000 daily, or a combined circulation for both papers of more than 500,000 readers weekdays

more than 750,000 readers Saturday and Sunday

Advertisements designed for THE EVENING WORLD of Saturday and THE SUNDAY WORLD Classified Want-Ad Section in combination, must be in hand at the Main Office by 10.30 A. M. Saturday. Combination advertisements designed for the Real Estate Section of THE SUNDAY WORLD (with the Saturday Evening World) must be received by 9 P. M. Friday

This is the most comprehensive newspaper coverage ever offered the classified advertiser. In bringing buyer and seller together, in providing a short-cut between the employer with work to be done and the worker in search of employment — in saving both of them all waste motion in solving the needs of every-day business — in locating the lost and restoring the found — in seeking a tenant for the landlord and a home for the house-hunter — in buying, selling and leasing real estate and apartments — in performing a myriad of functions impossible through any other means — the value of such a service to the community is incalculable.

Advertisers desiring to avail themselves of this unprecedented service can telephone their classified advertising to BEEkman 8300—the largest equipment ever installed for the reception of advertising by phone—or "copy" may be left at any of the offices below, or at any of the 800 agencies in New York empowered to receive WORLD advertisements at regular office rates. As in the past, all Lost and Found advertisements will be broadcast twice-a-week over W G B S—the most complete service ever offered in conjunction with classified advertising.
